

Portlander Held by Nazis Forced to Pay Jail Board While Awaiting Spy Trial

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—(AP)—Three weeks as the unwilling "guests" of suspicious Nazi secret police caused Arthur Riehl to assert today he would eliminate Germany from all future European tours.

The young Portland, Ore., architect paused long enough during his job-hunting here, to relate how he had been held as a suspected spy and subjected to trial.

He was not so much annoyed by the confinement—part of which was solitary—as he was by the fact the Germans insisted that he pay "board and room" while in jail.

"They made me pay for my food and lodging and for my transportation when they took me across Germany to stand trial," Riehl explained.

When he was finally released, Riehl said, the police "didn't bother to apologize" for their error nor would they refund his money.

"They told me," he said, "that I had an opportunity to see the country and that I should be satisfied with that."

For the benefit of others planning to visit Nazi-land, Riehl suggested: "If I were ever to return to Germany, and I do not intend to do so, I would take care to stick to the straight and narrow tourist trails. There's no place there for a visitor who wants to deviate from the regular routine."

It was "deviating from the regular routine" that caused Riehl his trouble.

After graduating from the University of Oregon, where he worked his way through school as a professional wrestler, Riehl entered the Massachusetts Institute of Technology on a scholarship.

His work there won him a fellowship which took him to Europe. Early in 1937, while visiting Lubbeck, Germany, Riehl became acquainted with two German youths and on one occasion made a bicycle trip with them to a popular beach resort.

Riehl said his acquaintance with the young men was casual, as he did not speak German well. He left Lubbeck shortly afterward and traveled extensively on the continent, returning to Germany nine months later.

He was arrested at Stuttgart, several hundred miles from Lubbeck, while waiting in front of a tailor shop to obtain his clothes before leaving for home.

The Nazi secret police jailed him after refusing to accept his passport or to permit him to contact the American consul. At his trial held in Lubbeck, it developed he was suspected of attempting to obtain military information from his two bicycling companions, who had been employed in an airplane factory.

Riehl said one of them went to prison for nine months and the other for six months for associating with the American. Riehl still classifies himself as a "tourist" but hopes to settle down to a job as an architect—preferably with the government's housing administration—in Washington. If he does not obtain a job he will return to Portland.

WALLACE WARNS FARMERS AGAINST FOES OF NEW LAW

Secretary Urges Defense of Program Against Enemies Who Would Destroy Measure by Substitutes

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—(AP)—Secretary Wallace urged farmers today to defend "your farm programs" against "enemies" who, he said, sought to destroy agriculture by advancing price-fixing and export-dumping substitutes for the new farm law.

The administration farm chief envisioned a "return to 1932" with four-cent cotton, 30 cent wheat and three-cent hogs unless "we get genuine and complete compliance" with present programs.

Not Political Job

"Go out and defend your farm programs against those who are trying to divide the farmers," Wallace said. "I am not urging you to do a political job but defend that in which you believe."

Wallace's remarks were made to a meeting of 200 state committeemen of the agricultural adjustment administration, called to Washington to discuss plans for next year's planting programs.

Reviewing the agricultural situation, Wallace urged farmers to take advantage of government loans to hold surpluses off the market until the supplies are smaller and prices better.

The secretary criticized proposals advanced in some cotton and wheat producing regions for replacing the present farm law by a domestic allotment plan. Under this plan, the government would fix prices on products consumed domestically at rates above world prices so as to assure growers cost of production. Farmers would be free to produce all they desired for sale in export markets at whatever prices they could get.

Would Destroy Farmer

"Many advocates of this plan," he said, "are people whose hearts are not right. They would destroy the farmer."

"This plan would constitute wholesale export dumping. He would ship out supplies abroad and get nothing in return."

Wallace suggested, however, it might be necessary to subsidize exports of wheat in order to secure and maintain this country's share in world markets. He placed that share at about 20 per cent of the world trade or about 100,000,000 bushels annually.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—(AP)—An official of the surplus commodities corporation said today a preliminary investigation had disclosed "no justification at this time" for government purchase of Oregon celery.
