

ONTARIO RANCHER MAKES BUSINESS OF SELLING ANTS

Paul Lehman Captures Busy Little Insects by Thousands for Scientists and Amusement Factories

ONTARIO, Ore., Aug. 19.—(Sp.)—Although ants are the cause of much worry to most picnicers, they have proved a means of income for Paul Lehman, who lives southwest of Ontario. Mr. Lehman captures ants by the thousands for entomologists and amusement factories which frequently send orders for five or ten thousand of the small insects.

difficulties of trapping the insects, they had to be counted, all five thousand of them, before the shipment was made. The counting required several hours, he said.

Mr. Lehman has found the study of ants to be an interesting hobby. "They have their armies, workers and a system of constructing their homes, and they even get drunk once in awhile," he reported. Although there are approximately seven thousand known species, the harvester and the hunter ants are the most common in this vicinity.

The harvesters gather nothing but pebbles and the seeds from grain and weeds which they store in their chambers for use the following winter. They are strictly vegetarian while the black ants are hunters and capture other insects for their food.

"Volumes that would fill every library in this section of the country have been written concerning ants and their habits and there is still that much more to learn about them," Mr. Lehman said.

Besides trapping ants in his spare time, Mr. Lehman operates the muskrat farm southwest of Ontario.

Mr. Lehman is a brother-in-law of Thomas Hatlett, formerly of the Antelope district, who now assists in the ant industry.

Stennetts Visit Carson City Smallest Capital In Country; Enjoy Mineral, Relic Exhibit

RENO, Nev., Aug. 17.—(Sp. Correspondence)—The writer and wife drove from Reno yesterday to the quaint little city of Carson, known as the smallest state capital city in the United States.

The distance is 32 miles from Reno, with a well-paved highway winding through a valley with green, prosperous looking ranches on both sides of the highway.

Carson City is a town of 2000 population, nestling among a mass of large trees. Many of the homes are practically new, large and modern, yet there are numerous old homes of the pioneer type still standing and occupied by families.

We visited the little stone state capitol building and viewed the many cases of mineral exhibits and Indian relics, all of which were presented to the state by Dr. S. L. Lee, an eminent pioneer physician and surgeon, who died at Carson City in 1927 at the age of 83. Dr. Lee devoted his life to gathering this collection of stones and Indian relics at an estimated cost of $40,000. The stones are all polished, classified and labeled. It is claimed to be the finest individual collection ever assembled and no price could buy them from the state.

Across the street from the state capitol is the new supreme court and library building. It is a handsome structure built from Nevada stone excavated at the state prison, about two miles from the city.

The old government mint, a large structure, is near by, but now unused and offered for sale.

We next visited the state printing house and met our old friend, Joe Farnsworth, state printer. Joe has held the office for 18 successive years and the opposition party has quit putting up a candidate against him. Farnsworth invited us to make the trip to the state prison in his car. When we arrived there the guard said he thought we were too late to go through the prison, but when Joe appealed to the warden he said: "Hell, yes, we'll take your webfoot friends through and show them everything we have got." A strapping big accommodating attendant was supplied and he piloted us through the entire building and pointed out the bad ones among the 104 prisoners. We were shown the gallows where they used to hang them, then the spot where they later used to shoot the convicted murderers, and finally the gas house, the latest innovation, where ten murderers have already been put to death. We visited the prison factory where all Nevada auto license plates are made.

The prison is built of stone excavated from the mountain side in which the prison is built, and in the prison yard is a cavern extending back into the mountain where the bones and skulls of prehistoric animals have been found. In the stone are footprints of three-toed animals, more than a foot in dimension, which must have carried some kind of an animal big as a box car.

All the stone for Nevada public buildings is excavated at the prison by the inmates. The prison is well built, supplied with the latest cell-locking devices, is clean, well ventilated, substantial food supplied, and the 101 men and three women seem to be pretty well contented with their lot.

From Carson City we went to beautiful Lake Tahoe where we traversed many miles of shore line, both north and south. From the lake we returned to Reno over the Montrose incline highway, reaching an elevation of 8933 feet, passing by several snowdrifts. The highway is well paved but narrow and unrolled, and there were many places where my scattering hair stood on end when I looked directly down thousands of feet at the bottomless abyss. I remarked to my wife if I fell over the cliff, I would die of old age before I hit the bottom.

The weather is ideal, a little warm at noon time, but cool of mornings and evenings.

NEW SPRAY INTERESTS GROWERS OF WALNUTS

NEWBERG, Aug. 19.—(Sp.)—A new spray material for control of walnut blight and a new method of handling sprayers in old orchards attracted interest today of walnut growers on an annual field trip.

Dr. P. W. Miller, federal pathologist from Oregon State college, said copper oxydate had given equal or better control of blight during three years of trials than bordeaux mixture, now widely used, without foliar injury.
