Sparrows Greeted Home By Gayly Costumed Friends

When Mrs. Ruth Sparrow and her daughter, Miss Harriet Sparrow arrived at the Southern Pacific depot here this morning from an extended European vacation, they probably thought they had become confused and were just arriving in Italy. For here they were greeted by a group of friends attired in gay native Italian costumes complete with baskets of fruit, confetti, bouquets of flowers and all, even an accordion greeted them with soft melodies of "O Sol Mio."

The welcome home committee was comprised of Miss Margaret Hubbard, Mrs. Don Clark and daughter, Nancy, Mrs. Robert Ruhl and daughter, Alicia, Mrs. Sprague Riegel, Mrs. H. D. McCaskey, Mrs. F. Corning Kenly, Mrs. Sparrow's mother, Mrs. Fannie Withington and Mr. and Mrs. James Firth and son David of Crescent City, Cal. Mrs. Firth is Mrs. Sparrow's elder daughter.

The two travellers left their Kirtland farm home near Central Point in March for Europe. The majority of their sojourn was spent in Italy with visits and side trips to Budapest and Vienna and other important places of interest.

When the welcome home committee's enthusiastic greetings had subsided sufficiently for the writer to get in a word, Mrs. Sparrow, in a very brief interview, remarked that it was her opinion that people in the United States worried more about European war conditions than Europe itself does.

So you don't like "modern" music, eh?

It does sound pretty terrible sometimes—this "modern" music. Yet these must be something to it—so many people do like it. Perhaps your eyes—and your ears—would be opened were you to listen to the English Horn.

This instrument is not English but French, not a horn but a wood-wind—the alto oboe. It is always slightly out of tune with itself—something characteristic, too, of "modern" music.

The degree of harmony between pitch and overtone vibrations—every sound has both—gives each instrument its individual quality or color. In the English Horn, pitch and overtone vibrations don't hit it off. They don't quite match up.

This inherent dissonance in every note of the English Horn makes you sense remotely that something is wrong. So composers use it when skeletons dance, when the gods sorrow, when doom is gathering.

At first the ear fights all such dissonances. But the English Horn grows on you. You come to like the same colorful unbalance of tone spread through the whole orchestra. And there you are, liking "modern" music.

By such unpretending but "inside" information about music, the Standard School Broadcast each week during the school year helps 350,000 children—and countless grown-ups—make all fine music a friend for life.
