

VALLEY PIONEERS NAME MRS. LOTHER OF ASHLAND HEAD

ters, two sons, and ten grandchildren (the speaker's mother was five months old), fifty ox teams, two horses, and about 80 head of cattle. In western Nebraska the men belonging to a neighboring caravan began a bridge across a river. "They charged 25 cents per wagon for the use of it, our men doing all the labor," the diary stated. "The bridge consisted simply of two logs across the stream, so far apart the wheels are outside the logs. The wagons were then placed on the logs with the lead, by hand, and then drawn by oxen across, sliding the axels on the logs. . . . After we crossed the bridge and paid the toll others came and took possession of it and crossed without paying toll. There was a good deal of jangling about it. "I would like to relate a story about Mother Dunn," Mr. Billings said. "An Indian struck a man, severing an artery. Mother Dunn and her sister took turns holding the severed artery for twenty hours until a physician could be brought from Jacksonville." Mentioning the grandeur of Oregon, the speaker quoted from Martha Barron. "I thought when I got my first glimpse of Rogue River valley, it was the grandest view I had ever seen." When she was over ninety years of age, Mrs. Barron was of the same opinion.

From various letters and diaries Mr. Billings traced the numerous phases of development of the state. E. K. Anderson packed the first seed wheat to this section on horseback from Yamhill, selling his 12 acre harvest the following year for 12 dollars a bushel. Later popular brands of flour came from the Holmes, Engle M. and Ashland mills, the latter being built by Helman Brothers, and managed by Jacob Wagner and family. A woolen mill was built in Ashland in 1867, and the salt supply, guarded like gold, came from evaporated spring waters on Evans creek. Glori Munday apples sold to a miner at Gold Hill for $2.50 each, and from the first agricultural society grew the famed Central Point fairs and the present fair buildings at Medford. The first quartz mill was brought by ox team from Scottsburg to Gold Hill for Klippel and partners with a freight bill of $2,600. The speaker traced the history of roads, markets, education, and religion, naming the early ministers. "Our people were lovers of the land as well as their homes," Mr. Billings declared, and urged opposition of land destruction by dredging operations. "We have a heritage to cultivate, protect, and pass on. The last few years have been hard ones, and many have kept going by the use of the gold pan, the needle and thread, even as our pioneers. When we think the way is hard, let us remind ourselves of our responsibility to preserve the heritage that our ancestors so nobly gave us." In closing he quoted from Joaquin Miller.

A school bit of humor was infused in an otherwise serious occasion when William Greenleaf of Willow Springs, well known Shakespearean player, called the Indians swine in a reading from "The Hussy" and gave other readings during the morning session from Edgar Wilson Nye and James Whitcomb Riley, all of whom were his personal friends.

A resolution was given by Rev. L. F. Kalkris of Medford, whose family came to Benton county in 1847. Telegrams of greeting to the pioneer association were read from Mrs. Margaret Delpe of Portland, president of the Sons and Daughters of Pioneers of Oregon, and from Col. Robert A. Miller of Portland. Mrs. Delpe extended an invitation to attend the meeting of the Sons and Daughters Club, which she had organized. John Griffin, local pioneer, whose illness prevented his attendance, also sent a greeting and original verse, which was read by George W. Dunn.

Music, in charge of Mrs. Elsie Carlson Strang of Medford, included vocal numbers by Mrs. Jeanne McAllister, Mrs. Strang and Robert C. Wright of Medford, Mrs. Katherine Wendt of Jacksonville, and a presentation by the brass quartet from Medford high school.

Mrs. Mabel Lotner presented an invitation from Ashland chamber of commerce to attend the convention of the Shasta Cascade Wonderland Association there Oct. 10th and 11th. Treffie La Senay, publicity member of the Wonderland exposition committee, described briefly the association exhibits at the World Fair in San Francisco next year, which will represent nine Oregon and California counties.

At noon a bountiful chicken dinner was served by the ladies of the Jacksonville grange. The dining room was filled to capacity, and extra tables were set in the hall.

During the afternoon business session names of the following Pioneer society members who have died during the last year were read by Miss Claire Hanley, secretary: Mrs. M. P. McClellan, James Frank Kerry, James Logan Woodridge, Henry H. Thornton, John William Loftus, Henry H. Goodard, Dr. J. W. Robinson, Harry L. Miller, Sarah P. Orsatt, Thomas E. Ross. A motion of sympathy was put on record.
