Big Applegate

APPLEGATE, Oct. 14.—(Spl.)—"Years ago parent education was talked over the back fence; today it is talked over the bridge table and the golf course," Mrs. Maud Morse, parent education specialist from Oregon State college, said as she traced the rapid advancement in this phase of study at the eighth annual family living conference held at the First Christian church here Tuesday.

"Parent education is not new, but it has changed from surmise to scientific study. We don't need to 'hope' for health and happiness of our children, but we really know how to bring these things about," the speaker said as she contrasted the present field of knowledge with that of less than a century ago. In 1815 the first mothers' study club was organized in Portland, Me., and in 1824 the first mothers' magazine was published.

Mrs. Morse gave a number of quotations from these early periodicals, written by ministers and doctors, which, in a few instances, showed rare advancement of ideas. Young parents then gained wisdom from the experience of their own parents, inspiration from religious leaders and strength from prayer. Other sources of information were listed as the Bible, family doctor and minister, school teachers, the neighbors, and the almanac, all of which were climaxed with a strong parental instinct, regarded as a guiding light. The speaker contrasted this limited field of information with the vast development in the work today, which includes many types of specialists, radio broadcasts, college extension service, and an unlimited amount of information in books and magazines.

However, Mrs. Morse warned her audience not to look too lightly upon the mistaken ideas of the past, in view of the fact that those ideas served their purpose then, and that even in a few years from now many things that are accepted today will be disproven. She also urged that each individual should be able to avoid blind, uncritical acceptance of facts which come to him, and should know which material is best suited to his needs. An open mind, a willingness to listen, and a scientific attitude are necessary, she said.

During the day Mrs. Morse briefly answered personal problems of mothers attending the conference which were entered in a question box. The family living conference opens the extensive parent education program launched in Jackson county during the next six months by the home demonstration agent and the college extension service. Parents' meetings will be held during the year, when such college staff members as Dr. O. R. Chambers, Mrs. Sara Prentiss and Mrs. Morse will be heard.

Miss Alice Hanley, honorary chairman of the county extension committee, presided during the luncheon program. Mrs. Lee Port of Applegate and Mrs. Rita Myers of Medford, of the county committee, spoke on the conference of the Countrywomen of the World in London next spring, and ways of raising funds to send a delegate from Jackson county. At the present time Jackson county is the only county planning to be represented. Miss Imogene Smith of Talent gave vocal solos during the luncheon, playing her own piano accompaniment.

Alumni members of the county committee introduced by Miss Hanley included Mrs. Effie Birdseye of Rogue River, Mrs. J. R. McCracken of Ashland and Mrs. Mabel Thornton of Medford. Mrs. Ida Sweeney of Medford, mother of Mrs. Mabel Mack, also was introduced. Mrs Mack spoke briefly on the history of the county committee and of the London conference.

Mrs. Zuba Gates of Trail, county parent education project leader, presided during the conference, with group singing led in the morning by Mrs. Marjory Pena. Mrs. Florine Severance, chairman of the Jacksonville extension unit, led the singing at the afternoon session.
