MISSOURI RULES MOVIE QUIZ BAD

Dramatic Power of "Boy Town" Brings Acclaim of Crowds

Cold black type alone cannot begin to describe the dramatic power of "Boy Town," which opened yesterday at the Craterian theatre. Words alone cannot express its realistic humanism. That it will unquestionably be in the front when the Academy Awards are being passed out is a foregone conclusion. It's a real-life story of Boys Town near Omaha, the priest who founded it, the boys who inhabit it and their spirit and ideals. It is not merely a grouping of theistic fundamentals, not a spectacle, not a lot of heroes, but rather the saga of an idea and an ideal.

Spencer Tracy, given the role of Father Flanagan, once again proves himself to be one of the finest actors of motion pictures. Skyrocketing Mickey Rooney is Whitey Marsh, and definitely proves himself as good a dramatic player as the comedian he has established himself in the Hardy pictures.

The story of the picture, and the story of the real Boys Town are practically identical. It opens with Father Flanagan consoling a criminal about to be executed. When he hears Flanagan's bitter story of not having had any friends from the time he was a 12-year-old boy, it starts the good father thinking, and watching the acts of some boy hoodlums adds to his burden. Realizing that if homeless boys might be helped when they are at an early age, they might be saved for society. With the willing but sometimes skeptical moral and financial support of a pawnbroker, he starts the first poverty-stricken "Boy Town." Everyone expects doubts of any success, but as Father Flanagan pleads, the community grows and Boys Town soon has hundreds of children.

To it comes a thoroughly bad boy, Whitey Marsh. He sneers at the ideals of Boys Town. It's not the place for a "big shot" but no one lets him think he is one. In ruthless ways he tries to dominate things. Failing, his resentment intensifies. He runs away but the dinner bell brings him back. Again he runs away and in Omaha is wounded in a bank holdup. One of the criminals is his brother who hides him in a church. He is found there by the priest. But Whitey won't talk. Then, in a series of fast-moving, powerfully dramatic events, things are brought to a resounding conclusion, a conclusion that leaves one with the feeling of having witnessed one of the finest pictures filmdom has ever produced.

Plans were outlined for work to be accomplished during the remaining days before the election. It was decided to offer transportation to any voters who have no way of getting to the polls. It was decided also to hold meetings in any outlying district wherein the committee recommends such a course.

WARNING SOUNDED BY HESS ON TORY REIGN IN OREGON

Henry L. Hess of La Grande, Democratic nominee for governor, counseled in radio talks here yesterday against turning the state administration over to reactionaries of the Hoover type.

Mr. Hess quoted from the Salem newspaper of his Republican opponent, Charles A. Sprague, in an attempt to convince his audience that Sprague was a Hoover supporter opposed to social legislation and other progressive policies of President Roosevelt.

The Democratic candidate spoke twice yesterday over station KMED, at noon and early evening. Last night he, Frank Tierney of Portland, state chairman, and State Representative Vernon Bull of La Grande were guests of party leaders at dinner in the Hotel Medford.

Following Mr. Hess on the radio last night, Clarence R. Wagoner spoke on behalf of Mr. Sprague. Apparently referring to past editorials in Mr. Sprague's newspaper, Mr. Wagoner said he was more concerned about what a man stood for today than what he stood for at some time in the past. Mr. Wagoner's address was flowery and larded plentifully with sentimentality. Mr. Sprague defended Mr. Wagoner in the primary.

In his radio talks Mr. Hess referred to his record in the state senate in an effort to show that he was genuinely a liberal and progressive. Mr. Hess addressed three different groups yesterday and this morning he spoke before the student assembly of the Southern Oregon State Normal school in Ashland. He held conferences here this afternoon at the county courthouse in Grants Pass at 8 tonight.

REPUBLICAN WORKERS HEAR WAGONER; MAKE PLANS FOR FUTURE

A resume of political conditions throughout the state was given at a meeting of Republican precinct committeemen last night by Clarence R. Wagoner who was here campaigning for Charles A. Sprague, nominee for governor who defeated Wagoner in the primary election.

Mrs. Wagoner advised the committeemen on work to be done between now and the election November 8. Ed Campbell, former Multnomah county chairman who was traveling with Mr. Wagoner, gave suggestions for perfecting the Republican organization in Jackson county.

The meeting was held at Republican headquarters, 211 East Main street. The committeemen present gave reports on the work that has been done and others telephoned in their reports.

Plans were outlined for work to be accomplished during the remaining days before the election. It was decided to offer transportation to any voters who have no way of getting to the polls. It was decided also to hold meetings in any outlying district wherein the committee recommends such a course.
