Co-eds at many Pacific Coast institutions have registered strong protests against drum majorettes.

Another variant lot is threatened with a service station. With all the progress science has made, there ought to be some other way to keep the autumn leaves raked up.

All the convincing alibis to explain the defeat of the New Deal candidates at the general election have been presented. It seems to have been due to most anything but the lack of votes.

TRIALS OF JOURNALISM (Oregon City Enterprise). "An Enterprise headline writer has been cured of using 'four-bit' words which may be beyond the ken of the average reader."

Wednesday morning he used the word 'program' in a headline over a story which related to President Roosevelt's criticism of Nazi persecution of Jews.

All that day he was kept busy explaining to readers that the word was correctly used, and not a misnomering of "program."

Old Oregon defeated Washington by a margin of three points. The field goal was not kicked by a sophomore, so it seems to be all right.

"The doctor said we didn't have enough teeth to chew our food properly. So after due consideration we decided that a metal food chopper would be more serviceable and cheaper than a set hammered out of a gold nugget by a dentist, and now have one on hand, fastened to the table by our side and by turning the crank can grind our beans, chicken and dumplings in any quantity desired without tiring our jaws, the least bit, or having any pain in our head, body or toe nails."—(Caucas Herald.)

The US-United Kingdom and Canada economic treaty signed last week to give "new vitality to world order" are viewed with suspicion in some sections of the state press. The facts have been likened to lawyers prone to elicit "objections" during a trial, for lack of anything else to chirp. The rest of the world pays no attention. When the statements start calling each other learned diplomats will be the time to look out.

Headlines blare, "Germany Stirs President" for his stand against Nazi persecutions of the Jewish people. This is a privilege for Americans only, during a political campaign.

The Football Imponderable

WELL the football season is nearly over, and it has been a very unusual one. Either the game, for some strange reason, has changed, or the 1938 program has been a freak,—probably the latter.

There have always been upsets in this greatest of all outdoor games, but never before as many as this year,—it has been an upset season, from the first whistle onward.

Experts, heretofore, have agreed that power was the deciding football factor. But this season it has been condition,—physical of course, but even more so MENTAL.

TAKE that unexpected upset at Portland Saturday, the lame and dispirited Ducks, banged about by every team from coast to coast, suddenly rising in wrath, and making monkeys out of the Washington Huskies; who a week before, after one of the most pitiful seasons in history, did the same thing to the proud and haughty U.S.C. Rose Bowl favorites of Los Angeles.

In both instances neither sheer power nor knowledge of the game had much to do with the result. In both instances the mental attitude, the do-or-die spirit, the will-to-win, in short "morale" had EVERYTHING to do with it.

Hereafter, those who wish to make a reputation as football oracles, or desire to play the football "parleys" without losing their respective shirts, will have to do more than study respective scores, get the latest dope from the coaching staff or the training tables and "sich like."

They will have to take a course in mass psychology and find what's really inside the heads and hearts of the two teams as they line up for the kick-off.

Can't Buy the People

WE have failed to mention one of the most gratifying features of the recent election. That was the final disposal of the label that the American people, or a majority of them, are corrupt. (Or if that appears too strong a term then that they will vote against their convictions, in the hope of monetary reward,—i.e.: the hope of relief.)

Now of course, we have never believed there was any general or outright buying of votes, in the relief ranks. Nothing as crude as that. But we have been forced to believe, that Democratic candidates were not at all averse to creating this impression,—that a vote for them would mean, bigger and better relief, and a vote against them would mean less relief,—or none at all.

In the recent campaign neither Hess nor Mahoney were averse to creating such an impression, in fact they frankly stated at times, a vote for them meant a vote for more millions from Santa Claus; a vote for either Sprague or Holman, would mean a financial sacrifice.

WHAT made it even harder for the Republican candidates, from the standpoint of practical politics, was that many Republican newspapers supported this contention, maintaining the Democratic party was shamelessly engaged, in buying the election, and there seemed to be nothing one could do about it,—as long as such congenial crooks as Hopkins, Leakes and their ilk, were handling the federal purse strings.

Now, of course, this was never true. Whatever may be said against these two men, neither of them is dishonest or corrupt, in fact personally they are scrupulously the reverse.

As before stated, however, even they during a campaign, did not object to allowing the impression to prevail, that a vote for a Democratic candidate meant more relief money, and a Republican vote, less.

NOW as a result of the Republican landslide in this state, and elsewhere for that matter, either one of two things has been definitely established:

Either the American people refused to believe, that a Republican vote would mean less relief, or,—

They did believe it, but even so, voted as their consciences dictated,—voted for the candidates they believed would give their communities and their country the best government, regardless of any immediate monetary and selfish benefit, to themselves.

In either case it's all to the good, for the election conclusively demonstrated, that this is a better country, and the American people are of a finer and higher type,—

Than the Lugubrious Blues and Viewers With Alarm maintained when the campaign started.

A Good Start

ANOTHER thing we liked about the election in Oregon. There was no disposition on the part of the victorious Republican leaders Messrs. Sprague and Holman, to exult unduly over the result.

Rufus, with characteristic impetuosity, couldn't resist rubbing it in, as far as Spike Hennessey of the Oregonian was concerned; but the formal speech he gave in Portland following the battle, was a model of restraint, dignity and partisan temperance.

Moderation, tolerance and good sportsmanship were of course expected by friends of Governor-elect Sprague, and they were not disappointed. "Charley" was pleased over the vote of confidence he received, of course, but far from feeling any disposition to execute a war dance, he felt sobered by the outcome, and constrained to concentrate upon the seriousness of the problems now before him, rather than wasting time over bon-fire celebration or congratulatory banquets.

Both reactions were desirable, and reassuring. They demonstrate that Oregon will have as Governor and Junior Senator, men of the right type for these parlous times,—men who sense both their responsibility, and the gravity of the times; men who are not so much concerned about personal or partisan glory, as they are how they can best serve their country and their state.

Personal Health Service

THE CRAVING

From here to the initials in parenthesis this is a letter from a reader:

My husband is a victim of alcoholism. I wrote to you two years ago and you recommended Dr. Lambert's method of treatment. My husband kept saying that he could give up the liquor habit without the treatment, but the last nine months he has gotten worse than ever. He goes a week or ten days without it and then goes on for three or four days. He drinks on the job, and consequently lost a very good job. That has only made him worse.

August 15 he decided to take your treatment (meaning the Lambert treatment). He entered the hospital at [redacted], we lived near there until recently. He was under a good physician who started the treatment at once. My husband reacted to the medicine in 2 1/2 days. The doctor was astonished that he reacted so quickly, but did not explain to us what that meant. He merely stopped the medicine, kept him four days, then told him he could go.

A week after he came home my husband did some hard work, still felt a little weak from the medicine, so he turned to alcohol to pep him up. On the 15th he got started he kept on as usual. Next day when I spoke to him about it, he said he had intended not to take that first drink, but claimed he only craves it after he has had several. However, he seems to get the craving regularly, and then he blames me for all the little things I've done or failed to do—he gives these as the reason.

When he reacted to that medicine so quickly, doesn't it signify that it is just a matter of him making up his mind to leave alcohol alone?

In the hospital he kept asking the doctor if he didn't think a change of environment would help him. Well, four weeks ago we moved to another state, and two days after we arrived there my husband came home with something to drink, and has been at it ever since. We are living with my relatives now. Our great worry is that my husband may have and then trail off into the wind. Gambling today is as big and as vigorous as ever. But it isn't for fun. It's the one thing I know of where a sense of humor is out of place.

Comment on the Day's News

By FRANK JENKINS

THIS writer, like millions of other Americans, is shocked by the anti-Jewish outrages in Germany, which are a reversion to the barbarism of the Dark Ages. It is hard to read of them without feeling that the world is slipping backward instead of going forward.

But, although shocked and horrified, this particular writer holds to the notion that what has happened in Germany is Germany's business, and not ours. (Not ours, that is, to the extent of fighting about it.)

EVERY time we interfere in a neighbor's quarrel, we get our shins badly bruised in the ensuing ruckus and don't do very much real good either.

THE last time we fought it was to make the world safe for democracy, and democracy is now facing greater dangers than for a century past. If we fight to make the world tolerant, the result, as like as not, will be STILL GREATER INTOLERANCE.

If we keep AMERICA democratic and tolerant, we will be doing well enough.

A GAL down at San Diego is serving a 25-day sentence in jail because she was caught swimming in the surf in the nude. She claimed the waves washed her suit off when a shoulder strap broke.

We're being fearful for years something like that would happen.

AND a gal in Los Angeles has been sent to jail for contempt of court because she appeared before the judge in slacks.

Before agreeing or disagreeing with the sentence, we'd like to know how much the lady weighs.

The fat ones DO look terrible.

AND up in Bend a memory expert, on trial for murder, claims temporary insanity as a defense.

In other words, he couldn't remember, at the time, whether what he was doing was right or wrong.

That's an expert for you.
