A million House Flies CAN'T be wrong WE CONSIDER it our job to put dependability into everything we make. For instance, take fly spray. Fly spray is something you flit through the air with the greatest of ease. But the preparation of a fly spray which won't stain, won't dissipate too fast, and will kill flies is a complicated business. It requires the help of scientists and a million flies a year. That's why we run a fly farm.

The trick is to get the exactly right balance of atomizing oils, aromatics, and pyrethrum—the extract of a flower which gives Mr. Fly his countenance. Like people—and flies—pyrethrum shipments vary. Constant regulation is necessary. Each adjustment for variation means new tests must be made—on flies.

The supervising entomologists—an exacting clan—insist on laboratory precision. The flies must be five days old—no more, no less—because that's when they're most spray-resistant. And no penitentiary has a more scientifically constructed lethal chamber.

In that chamber flies are executed by the million and at the height of their power—to make sure something designed to protect you and yours from disease really does so, and a million flies can't be wrong! Those flies are, in fact, a million be-winged guinea pigs.

KLAMATH RELIEF LOAD LEVELS OFF

KLAMATH FALLS, Dec. 7.—(P)—Klamath county's relief program can go on unhindered by the state relief committee's rigid rulings if the December outlay can be kept within a $16,187 estimate. In the opinion of Max Dudley, secretary of the county relief committee.

Predictions that the financial status of relief in several Oregon counties would soon be reduced to chaos have recently been voiced by authorities in close touch with the relief situation. Dudley feels, however, that the relief program is now leveling off, countervailing a 10-year upward trend in all forms of relief payment.

"Retrenchment is in order," Dudley said. "The state committee's new policy shows that to be a fact, and it is apparent that all counties will have to get in line."

SYMPHONY SETS LAST REHEARSAL BEFORE CONCERT

The Southern Oregon Symphony orchestra will hold final rehearsal Sunday for the concert to be given December 14. The orchestra, according to John R. Knight, director, is rapidly attaining a high state of perfection.

For several months the organization has rehearsed once each week in an effort to perform the most loved of all symphonies, the Schubert's "Unfinished." This production is correctly known as "Schubert's Eighth symphony. It consists of two movements instead of the usual three or four. This accounts for the misnomer "Unfinished" by which the work is commonly known. Great progress has been made by the orchestra since its inception four years ago. All of the members that have been in the orchestra since that time have matured in musical understanding as well as in years. The personnel has gradually changed until it now is in no way a children's organization.

One-half of the players are 18 years of age or older, many of them being seasoned musicians. This change has occasioned dropping the word "Junior" from the name. However, there is still room for advanced young people in the orchestra. Ability only is the requisite for membership.

With the aid of the Zonta International club of Medford, the orchestra will become self-supporting through funds raised at the concerts by ticket sales, rummage sales, etc. All funds are directly spent for the orchestra. There are no salaries. As time goes on the Southern Oregon Symphony orchestra will continue to make progress as it has in the past and will reap recognition as fast as it is merited.
