Dramatic Picture On Sunday Bill

From the famous best-seller by A. J. Cronin, M. D. the screen has fashioned a dynamic drama of a righting surgeon, set against the background of grim, merciless coal-mining valleys. The story is "The Citadel" and comes to the Craterian theatre Sunday for a three day showing, with Robert Donat and Rosalind Russell in the leading roles. A moving drama of the mines where a struggling young physician risks his life to save trapped workmen in the pit. "The Citadel" follows his career as he meets the girl of his choice, marries her and moves to the city. Ferdinand The Bull Animated By Disney On Craterian Screen

"Ferdinand the Bull," whose flower-ferning activities have become known throughout the country, is on the screen of the Craterian theatre in the Walt Disney animated cartoon in technicolor that is a special added attraction on the program opening a four day run today.

Peter B. Kyne's "Valley of the Giants" is the feature attraction. Ferdinand, as most of the world knows by now, is a young bull who does not join the other young bulls in their gambols, but is content to sit beneath a cork tree smelling flowers.

For three days five men come to the fields to pick bulls to fight in the bull fights in Madrid. The other bulls display their strength and fierceness by butting and throwing each other. But Ferdinand sits quietly beneath his tree until a bee stings him. His wild leaps and jumps catch the fancy of the men and he is carted away to Madrid.

The day of the bull fight is filled with music, serenades with bouquets of flowers, and crowds of people. A procession of bandiereros, plowders, and the matador, precede the entrance of Ferdinand. As he enters the ring, he spins a bouquet of flowers that a senorita has tossed to the matador. He runs over to the bouquet, sits down and starts smelling the flowers.

In despair the matador pleads, stamps his feet, pulls his hair, but to no avail. Ferdinand will not fight. Then the matador bares his chest, disclosing a tattooed daisy. Adding insult to injury, Ferdinand licks the matador's chest, and is dragged unceremoniously from the ring.
