HOPE TO SALVAGE MUCH CASH FROM MUSICA SWINDLES

Investigators said they hope now, through questioning relatives of the Musicas, to obtain clues enabling them to recover a substantial portion of the stolen assets.

"Considerable of this must be in cash," said Brien McMahon, assistant U.S. attorney general, who flew here from Washington to head the co-ordinated inquiry by six federal agencies into McKesson & Robbins operations.

"We are seeking safety deposit vaults," he added. "When we find them we expect to find considerable cash."

McMahon described the eldest Musica, who ran the drug firm and hid his criminal past under the "F. Donald Coster" pseudonym, as probably the "biggest illicit liquor dealer in the country." He said the federal inquiry would result in the indictment of persons of "great prominence."

goods and fraudulent warehouse receipts to convince them.

Money Unfound What happened to the money—and its present whereabouts—have been among the chief problems facing investigators.

Authorities at first believed the missing funds might represent unpaid bills for illegal international arms and ammunition shipments which the self-slain eldest brother is accused of arranging as a profitable sideline in a career of crime in-vestigation.

Russians Execute Spies "N" And "X"

MOSCOW, Dec. 20.—(AP)—The execution of two spies identified as "N" and "X" was announced today by the army newspaper Red Star.

The paper said they had confessed planting "mass extermination of fighters and commanders by means of infection" and had admitted sabotaging army medical supplies.

"N" was described as a "German by nationality, born and raised in Russia." He had been with the Red Cross since 1921. "X" was employed in the sanitary service of the red army.

"This case has more widespread ramifications than any other fraud case in my memory," he remarked after conferring with other officials.

The body of Philip Musica, who shot himself to death in his palatial home at Fairfield, Conn., last Friday, was interred in a Brooklyn mausoleum yesterday. His widow and two hand-cuffed brothers attended funeral services.
