GADGETEERS LOOK HOPEFULLY AHEAD TO GREATER FEATS

Horde of Inventors Visions Low-Upkeep Diesel Auto, Cheap Air-Conditioning, Forest Blaza Chemicals

(United Press Staff Correspondent) SALT LAKE CITY, Utah (UP) - Within the next few years, 30,000 gadgeteers hope to pioneer the way: For $10 transcontinental trips in Diesel motored automobiles.

For America's next great industry - the manufacture of inexpensive air-conditioning equipment for every structure from a tent to a skyscraper.

For chemical apparatus that will enable airplanes to fly over forest fires and put them out - just like that.

At least, so says the elected chief of the National Inventors League, Albert G. (for Gadget) Burns of Alameda, Cal., as he appraised Salt Lake City as the location for the group's convention next spring.

Burns said he represents the "nuts" who retire into their darkened lairs and with feverish eyes and tumbled hair defy the sneers and jeers of friends to emerge with the 1,200 "whatchamacallits" that are patented every week in Washington.

But, he hastened to add, the "screwball inventors" are "the creative thinkers, who have made America great."

Every year hundreds of them assemble to display their latest brain children. After them troop scores of manufacturers from all nations, who eye the gadgets with wonder, realize the impossible has been done, and proceed to market the new labor-saving devices.

Burns insists the world would be a better place to live in and scores of new gadgets would come faster if the inventors were really turned loose.

Several things conspire to hold them back, he said. First of all, agitation over technological unemployment finds its culmination in proposals to declare a moratorium on all inventors.

The inventors' chief has only the greatest scorn for such moves. "I remember," Burns explained, "when they
