DEFENDANT DENIES SETTING FIRES IN INDIAN PRESERVE

Harris Claims No Reason for Setting Forest Fires—No Grudge Against Indians Or Lumbering Concerns

George Harris voiced a general denial of the charges as he testified today in his own behalf at his trial before Judge Claude McColloch and a jury in U. S. district court. Harris was charged in two informations with the destruction of trees in two different sections of the Klamath Indian reservation last July 12. The destruction, the government contended, was done by fires which Harris set.

Harris' defense was that he was not near the scene of the fires at the time they occurred. The fires occurred in an isolated part of the Klamath Indian reservation eight or nine miles from Sprague River, it was brought out.

Shoes Evidence Tennis shoes with a diamond design on their soles figured largely in the case, the government presenting evidence intended to show that Harris owned such a pair of shoes and that shoe prints of a diamond design were found at the scene of the fire. Some evidence was introduced by the government to establish that the same kind of shoe print had been seen at a previous fire on July 7. Earl Grear and Walter Kissner, defense witnesses, testified that during parts of July 9 Harris had visited their homes in Chiloquin. They also testified as character witnesses. Kissner said that in the 20 years he has known Harris he never knew the defendant to be in trouble excepting the "deal" last summer. It was brought out the witness referred to prosecution of Harris on an incendiary charge in state court at Klamath Falls last year. Harris was acquitted in state court.
