

OREGON WILL TRY GIVING RELIEFERS SURPLUS EDIBLES

Will Be First State to Attempt Project; Merchants and Farmers Like System

By Paul W. Harvey, Jr. Salem, Nov. 3.—(P)—Oregon's relief families and the nation's farmers may get together soon in the first statewide plan to get rid of surplus farm products by giving them to people on relief.

The project, which has been tried in several cities, but which never has been carried out in an entire state, is ready to go except for the ironing out of minor details.

Easier in City
It first was tried in Rochester, N. Y., last May and was pronounced a success. Recently the city of Seattle sponsored a similar project.

It is much easier to make it work in a city than in a state because in a city the administrative costs are smaller. Oregon would have to pay the administrative costs, while the federal surplus commodities corporation will pay for the surplus commodities.

Here's the way it works. When a person on relief gets his check, he can use part of it to buy a book of orange stamps, redeemable at any store for any food at face value. For each dollar's worth of orange stamps, he gets free 50 cents worth of blue stamps, which are good in any store for products designated as surplus.

Merchants Like Plan
Retail merchants like the idea because it keeps the purchase of food in regular channels. The relief clients like it because they get extra food for nothing. The farmers like it because it helps them get rid of their surplus products.

Before the stamp idea was tried out, the FSCC distributed the surplus products through relief depots. This didn't work well because persons on relief ate only surplus products and thus had unbalanced diets. The orange stamps, however, make sure that persons may have balanced diets.

About the only criticism of the plan comes from low-income families who can't get on the relief rolls. They likewise can't get any help under the project.

If Oregon adopts the idea, it probably will not go into it on a big scale. The state hasn't any too much money to administer it.

Oregon Republicans, who thought at first that Senator McNary should run for president only because he might get a vice-presidency out of it, now are thinking McNary might have a good chance after all.

When they think of how Warren G. Harding, a dark horse, was nominated in 1920, they start to dream beautiful dreams of how the same thing might happen to McNary.

In 1920, the convention was deadlocked, there being three candidates, none of whom could get a majority. So Harding, then a senator, got it.

In 1940, there will be three major candidates—Senator Vandenberg of Michigan, Senator Taft of Ohio, and District Attorney Dewey of New York City. Sponsors of McNary's candidacy hope history will repeat itself and give McNary the nomination.

Capitol sidights: If the San Francisco fair is held again next year, Oregon probably will have its exhibit again, but on a vastly reduced scale. Two million people saw the exhibit this year . . . when some governors travel, they take along a retinue of secretaries in a private car. When Governor Sprague went to California last week, he went alone and took a lower berth on a slow train.

NATION'S LUMBER CUT IN 1938 FAR BENEATH PRODUCTION IN 1937

Washington, Nov. 3.—(AP)—A decrease of 18.7 percent in lumber cut in the United States compared with 1937 was reported today by the bureau of the census.

Preliminary figures on production, Director William Austin of the bureau, said, showed the total cut for 1938 amounted to 21,646,271,000 feet, board measure.

Of the total, 18,292,823,000 feet were in soft wood and 3,353,448,000 hardwood lumber sawed.

The bureau's report also showed production of 583,777,000 lathes and 6,319,236 squares of shingles. A "square" is 800 shingles.

Yellow pine provided 33.2 percent or 7,196,206,000 feet of the year's total lumber production and was sawed in 21 states. Next in importance was Douglas fir, the cut of which amounted to 5,215,973,000 feet in 10 states.

Top production, of course, continued to be in the mills of Washington and Oregon, with an aggregate of 3,348,567,000 feet sawed in 567 mills reporting from Washington, and 3,790,896,000 feet sawed in 582 Oregon mills.

Another Carload of

GOLD BAR CANNED FOODS

That's right, we have to have the carload booked for January 1st come in right away. Never before, to our knowledge, have you given such immediate wholehearted approval to a food product.

While we expected you to like it, we didn't expect the news of its goodness to spread so quickly. The first car placed on sale September 20 included 38 tons while several hundred cases came in a separate shipment from northern canneries. That we now need another carload is conclusive proof of the goodness and economy of Gold Bar.

The supreme goodness at such low prices results from quality buying plus lower freight on carlot shipments.

There is a heap of food goodness in Gold Bar Canned Foods, yet the price is within reach of all.
