with their conscience over the prospect of swearing to a lie (including penalties), and the slow-moving state department mulled over the puzzle. This fruit situation established a precedent, for the state department had to work out a clarification to be followed by other shipments of fruit to belligerents and exportation of other commodities in other parts of the country.

It so happens that a couple of dozen cars of Columbia basin fruit were more troublesome to state department than the shipment of 800 bombers and pursuit planes, real munitions of war. More red-tape is involved in getting a box of apples to Britain and France than to send a ton of poison gas for bombs to drop on a civilian populace.

• • •

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says there is no law prohibiting a foreign government having merchant vessels built in the United States. This was his view when he discussed the subject with Admiral Land, chairman of the United States maritime commission (now under fire).

Background: Britain is rather dismayed at the steady and constant loss of its merchant tonnage, a loss which will, in all probability, continue until peace is restored. In addition to negotiating to buy some old tubs, now part of the American merchant marine, the British will soon be in the market for new vessels. Moving cautiously through agents in Canada, inquiries are being made about the prospect of ships being constructed on the Pacific coast—specifically in the Columbia river area and Puget Sound, both places having made splendid records in shipbuilding during the first World war.

Inquiry at various departments in the national capital reveals that there is no regulation or statute to prevent Britan and France having keels laid in yards on the Willamette or Columbia—if the Allies can make satisfactory terms with local interests.

A FEW paper mills on the Pacific coast (one in Washington state) are feeling the effects of the war. Germans have captured Swedish and Finnish vessels with cargoes destined for the mills and they are asking for assurances that the cargoes are not to be reconsigned to belligerents.

One vessel carrying 1050 tons for Vancouver, Wash., is receiving attention of the state department, which has instructed Wilbur Keblinger, general consul at Hamburg, to make an investigation. On the other hand, as a result of the German practice, American mills on the coast are enjoying prosperity.

ALMOST unnoticed were 110 railroad cars whose freight was loaded on steamers at Puget Sound docks. These cars carried lock, stock and barrel, a complete factory equipped to manufacture the rolling mills in which steel and other metal products are manufactured. The factory, which was the principal industry at Wooster, Ohio, was bought in toto by the Japanese.

This was in anticipation of the expiration of the trade treaty with Japan, which terminates in January. Of the large force employed by the factory all are now without work except four men, who have been given a year contract to teach the Japanese how to operate the factory when it is reassembled.

Purchase and shipment were completed before congress finished enacting the neutrality act. This act, however, does not apply to Japan as that country has not declared war against China—Japan, technically, has only put ashore a landing party to protect its nationals.

NOT every congressman can "take it." A representative is suing for $300,000 because he was mentioned, not to his liking, in a recent book on the national capital. This is equal to his salary for 30 years, if he remains that long as a lawmaker.

This member recently inserted in the Congressional Record an alleged letter of Colonel House, supposed to be written during the World war. Experts have denounced the letter as a fake.
