Proposed changes in the submission process include the suggestion that the congressional majority be allowed to submit amendments to the states, that the house and senate be required to act jointly.

Mrs. Carpenter, named first vice president of the group during its organization meeting last spring, has been serving as chairman since the League deferred election of a president.

Mrs. L. G. Lyman was elected vice-president to succeed Mrs. Carpenter.

William McAllister, Medford attorney, was guest speaker for the meeting and presented information on amendments to the national constitution and the amending process. The league study topic for the month has been the proposed amendment to the constitution which seeks to make the amending process less difficult.

Mr. McAllister opened his talk by stating that the drafters of the constitution had endeavored to maintain a perfect balance between ease and difficulty in wording of the clause pertaining to amendments, and then outlined the two amending processes and the two ratification processes provided for. He then sketched briefly the content of the 21 amendments which have been ratified by the states, adding that four had been proposed and failed of ratification and that one was still pending.

Objections often voiced to the present amending method were listed by Mr. McAllister, including the objection that amendments degenerate into political issues, that either house of a legislature can block ratification and that the number of states required for ratification is too high.

Among the proposed changes for the ratification process the speaker listed the suggestion that both houses of legislatures be required to act jointly, that an election of legislators must be held before action on the amendment, that the voting be according to population and that amendments be referred directly to the people.

Proposed changes in the submission process include the suggestion that the congressional majority be allowed to submit amendments to the states, that the house and senate be required to act jointly.

In closing Mr. McAllister commented on the various proposed changes and stated that in the opinion of most authorities on the subject "a change in the amendment process of the national constitution is neither necessary nor desirable."
