through the creation of an additional similar joint congressional committee to deal with national defense and appropriations therefore including an examination of past expenditures and adequacy of results therefrom and a survey of national military policy." McNary said while the conference took no normal action on the question of additional special taxes proposed by President Roosevelt to finance a part of the new defense program, widespread opposition was apparent.

Oppose New Taxes "There appeared to be almost unanimous opposition to any plan for further taxation at this session of congress," McNary told reporters. "We thought that it was unnecessary. We thought that retrenchment could be had by decreased government expenditures for the normal activities of regular government agencies. "In my opinion," McNary told reporters before the meeting, "super-appropriations for national defense should await the result of experimentation in the wars now being waged throughout the world. "I don't believe that the normal activities of government should be crippled to provide funds for an unnecessarily large national defense program, but I do believe that departmental expenditures should be substantially reduced."
