King Midas lumber company of Chicago and the King Midas match company of Los Angeles. When Mr. Meitus heard that the Seils and Sterling circus was being disbanded at Sheboygan, Wis., sometime ago he went shopping for some trucks and trailers for his lumber company. Later five Shetland ponies were put up for auction so he bought them for his two children. He ended up by buying the whole circus which cost $12,000. In the two years he has owned the circus more than 30,000 children, including cripples and orphans, have seen his animals perform free. At present the circus is housed in California. He recently returned from a stay in Hawaii. On Saturday the Medford visitors left for California.

Steenbeck's Book 'Of Mice and Men' Craterian Feature

No one who had read the book when it was first published ever expected to see John Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men" appear as a film. It was too daring a subject, treated with a stark reality that was unheard of in pictures. And yet a film version, true to the very spirit of Steinbeck's novel, opened yesterday at the Craterian theatre and proved once again that the screen is more powerful than the printed word. "Of Mice and Men" is a picture that will not be forgotten quickly. "Powerful" is the word that probably describes it best. It tells a new kind of story, startlingly different from other film stories. It tells of two men, "bindle-stiffs," or migratory workers, and the friendship between them: Lennie, huge, hulking and not too bright, and George, small, alert, and the protector of his large companion. Lennie is played with consummate skill by Lon Chaney, Jr., while Burgess Meredith has what is undoubtedly the finest role in his long career as George.

There is another character in the story who helps make the picture one that establishes it as one of the great dramas in years. Played by Betty Field, Mae is the unhappy wife of a ranch owner's son whose desire for human companionship, particularly a man's companionship, brings the picture to a stunning climax. For Mae does not realize the strength of Lennie's huge hands, or the strange, half-witted passions that stir his brain. There are others in the cast—Charles Bickford and Roman Bohnen are two outstanding principals—who help round out the story and the action, but it is Lennie and George and Mae around whom the drama centers. And "drama" in this particular case, is drama with a vengeance—stark, real, vivid, powerful! "Of Mice and Men" is an experience that no adult film fan should miss.

WAR MAY FIX AUTO STYLES FOR YEAR

Washington, May 27.—(U.P.)—Needs of the national defense program may mean that 1942 automobiles will be the same model as those for 1941. This possibility was raised in Washington today after Secretary of Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Junior, announced that the machine tool industry must supply at least $200,000,000 in new machine tools for the defense program. If this industry must devote all its resources to national defense, there may be no opportunity to develop machinery for new auto designs.

Myrna Loy, George Brent In Dramatic Film Now At Roxy

"The Rains Came," the sensation successful best-seller by Louis Bromfield, was presented at the Roxy theatre last night with Myrna Loy, Tyrone Power and George Brent in the stellar roles. A truly great motion picture has been made of Bromfield's thrilling story of a handful of humans, cut off from the world in the colorful mythical city of Rancipur, India—their emotions at the breaking point, their lives at the climax, and all restrained swept away as the untamed forces of nature ravage the earth. All the fascinating characters come magically to life and the earthquake, fire and flood scenes are reproduced with a breath-taking realism un-
