NAVY TO SPREAD ANTI-SUB NETS IN MAIN HARBORS

New Type Aircraft Cannon Also to Take Large Part of Navy's Emergency Fund

Washington, May 30.—(AP)—Congress learned today that a substantial part of the navy's share of emergency defense funds will go to protect 24 of the nation's harbors from submarine attacks and for the purchase of a new type of aircraft cannon.

The information came with publication of testimony of high-ranking officers during committee hearings on the $1,473,000,000 naval supply bill preparatory to sending the measure to a joint senate-house conference committee. Rear-Admiral W. R. Furlong, chief of the bureau of ordnance, said the navy planned to spend a total of $27,500,000 for anti-submarine nets at 24 harbors and fleet anchorages. An additional $8,000,000 was asked for the acquisition of 20 special type boats to serve as net tenders. The harbors were not identified.

Buy French Gun Patent. Furlong testified that the army and navy were buying for $400,000 the patent rights to France's new Hispano-Suiza-Burket 20-millimeter aircraft gun and that it was planned to put 2,000 of them in new warplanes. The European war has shown, he said, that ordinary machine-guns were of little use against armored planes.

Furlong said the navy had obtained considerable success in developing armor planes, largely using armor supplied by manufacturers of saws and safes.

Rear Admiral S. M. Robinson, coordinator of shipbuilding, told the committee the navy's program called also for equipping the entire fleet with devices for protection against magnetic mines and for the development of mine sweeping gear.

BRAZIL CALLED AMERICAS' KEY FOR DEFENSES

Major General Reports on Vital Needs in U. S. Set up — Limits Are Cited

San Francisco (U.P.)—Brazil is the "all-essential" country in South America for making possible the carrying out of the United States' new policy of insuring both Americas from invasion, according to Major-Gen. David P. Barrows of the U. S. army.

Barrows, former president of the University of California, prepared a detailed study for the national defense section of the Commonwealth club of California on the new problems created by America's determination to assume the defense in both southern Atlantic and southern Pacific waters.

Copies of the report have been placed in the hands of President Roosevelt, congressional leaders and the navy and war departments.

Two Oceans Considered. Explaining that a fleet can only operate within a radius of 2,000 to 2,500 miles, and an air force within a smaller area, Barrows points out the effective defense of the American fleet toward the south would be limited merely to the northern countries of South America. On the Pacific side, he points out, the circle of the fleet's effectiveness would pass through Peru. The present Atlantic bases, he said, furnish protection only as far south as the northern half of Brazil.

"While we can make our defense of the Panama canal and the Caribbean effective with our present naval and air bases, yet if we are to carry out our newly defined policy in North and South America, we must have help from the southern continent," he report stated.

"That help must necessarily be less military than naval in cooperation with our own efforts. "In South America," in my opinion, "the essential state is Brazil. Brazil is a mighty state, embracing half of the continent and half of the people. "I mean by cooperation, Brazil's willingness to put whatever she has that is useful to us at our disposal."

INCREASE NOTED IN APPENDICITIS

Wenatchee, Wash., May 30.—(AP)—Appendicitis, the "disease of civilization," is increasing in frequency and acuteness under the influence of modern diet, soft living and nerve-racking efforts to keep up with the Jones and the installment man, Dr. M. C. Beilke, associate professor of osteopathic technique at the Chicago College of Osteopathy, speaking at the convention of the Washington Osteopathic association, said today.

He said appendicitis came in to fashion about 1895 and has kept pace with civilization to date.

"Rebecca" Pleases Craterian Fans At Wednesday Showing

For quite some time much has been heard about "Rebecca," the motion picture adaptation of the du Maurier best seller of the same name. Yesterday, it opened a four day showing at the Craterian theatre and judging from audience response, is going to do in Medford just what it's been doing elsewhere—play to capacity crowds throughout its run.

"Rebecca" is a picture among pictures. Of course, it had a story that was definitely established as a favorite of two continents. But stories have reached the screen that were off-times unrecognizable and, sometimes, even though recognized, sadly mishandled. With "Rebecca" such is not the case.

Primarily it is a mystery drama in the true sense of the word. Alfred Hitchcock has been recognized as the master director of suspense and mystery so what could be better than to have him "megging" the film play. Stroke of fortune Number One.

The two lead characters in the story—and the secondary lead—are of prime importance. With the wrong players giving the wrong portrayals, a great story would be nothing but hash. Laurence Olivier and Joan Fontaine, with Judith Anderson playing the housekeeper, make evident a complete understanding of the spirit of the novel. Olivier definitely establishes himself after a noteworthy performance in "Wuthering Heights" to start things his way. And Joan Fontaine here becomes a star—no longer
