How to win prosperity and influence pocketbooks

WHAT this country needs — say Uncle Sam's experts — is an annual income of 80 billion smackers. That means, simply, 80 billions changing hands every year. Since the present annual income is about 65 billions, American prosperity — so the experts say — depends on another measly 15 billions.

Hm-m-m, on that basis it would take up the slack if four additional industries made dollars dance from hand to hand at the rate shown by the oil industry. It takes in — and spends — 4 billions a year. Even its profit-dollars go out to stockholders. They spend for shoes and washing-machines, facials, and diapers exactly as their employees spend the 1 1/2 billions received in wages.

The oil industry hands the tax collector away over a billion each year and spends another billion on supplies. That's pump-priming what is pump-priming. Its orders keep 40,000 steel workers employed, hold 90,000 railroad men on the job; its employees spend $333,000,000 yearly for food alone; in fact everybody is paid something.

So it does seem that — according to Uncle Sam's experts — more dollar-dishers with the oil industry's knack of keeping money bright from use are what this country needs. Besides, the tobacco people say the country already has a good 5-cent cigar.
