

PUBLIC SERVANT PENSION SYSTEM FACING HURDLES

Drafting Committee Fears Opposition On Ground Home Rule Is Violated

By Paul W. Harvey, Jr.
Salem, June 7.—(AP)—The governor's committee on public employees' retirement thinks it may get in hot water if it tries to force the political subdivisions of the state—counties, municipalities and special districts—to accept its proposed pension plan.

As the plan now stands, maximum benefits of $83 a month would be paid to employees of the state and its subdivisions after working 40 years and reaching the age of 65. The cost would be shared equally by the employer and employee.

Participation would be mandatory upon all state employees, as well as those of the subdivisions.

But the committee, realizing it may have considerable trouble in getting the subdivisions to accept it, wrote this in a memorandum:

"Certain questions arise as to the legality of such a provision in connection with municipal home rule. Legal counsel on this point will be obtained and incorporated in the draft."

The committee might ask the legislature to approve the plan containing such a provision. If the legislature does pass it, it is possible that some city, county or district might upset the whole plan by taking it into court on grounds that the plan violates home rule.

The committee believes some of these subdivisions might not go for the plan because it would cost them money.

The penitentiary's lethal gas chamber, which has been used only once, now serves as a grim reminder to parolees that they should go straight.

The parole board now holds its meetings in a room next to the chamber. Most of the prisoners get their first glimpse of the chamber when they appear before the board.

The state department of agriculture reminded reporters that Oregon still is one of the nation's first-ranking dairy states.

Oregon is fifth in American cheese production, eighth in Swiss cheese, ninth in cream cheese, 13th in dried milk, and 14th in dried casein.

European war developments remind us of what U. S. Sen. Edward D. Baker, Oregon's third senator, told congress in 1861 when he was arguing in favor of giving more power to President Lincoln in conducting the Civil war.

"I want sudden, bold, forward, determined war, and I do not think anybody can conduct war of that kind as well as a dictator," Baker said.

Baker died a few months later on the field of battle.

A word of advice to letter-writers to the governor: Please put your names on them. Here's how Cecil Edwards, governor's private secretary, explains it: "We read like Chinamen, starting from the bottom and reading up. If there's no signature on it, we don't read it. No write name, we no read."

Signs Vetoed.
Albany, N. Y.—Gov. Herbert H. Lehman has vetoed a Republican-sponsored bill requiring posting of signs on all public projects, reading: "This project paid for by taxpayers."

HAY FEVER FOUND OFTENEST AMONG BRAINIER PEOPLE

Allergic Students 5 to 10 Per Cent Smarter Than Those Physically Normal

Ann Arbor, Mich., June 7.—(AP)—Between sneezes this summer, the hay fever sufferer may find consolation in the thought that perhaps he is smarter than the next man.

From data compiled over a nine-year period, in which records of his allergy department were compared with the results of student entrance examinations, Dr. Buenaventura Jimenez of the University of Michigan has developed the theory that there is a definite relationship between a higher degree of intelligence and an allergic condition.

He has noted that students suffering from hay fever, asthma and eczema are generally rated from 5 to 10 per cent higher than non-allergic students in the mental achievement tests.

Statistics Proved
"These statistics are proved from a mathematical standpoint," says Dr. Jimenez, a middle-aged native of Puerto Rico who was graduated from the university 35 years ago and has practiced for the last 15 years in the university health service. "The element of chance has been removed."

Dr. Jimenez believes the conclusions can be applied to all age groups, for there is a sequence of allergic events, he says, which may be expressed as eczema in infancy, gastrointestinal disturbances in childhood, hay fever in adolescence or early youth, asthma in viril age, bronchitis later on in life, bronchiectasis still later on, and myocarditis in old age.
