MILLION MEN AND 3500 TANKS POUND WEYGAND CENTER

The advance guards had fallen back yesterday under General Maxime Weygand's orders and the movement continued tonight after French frontline positions had been swamped under the attack waves.
More Barriers
But still ahead of the Germans stretched a field of barriers all the way to Paris. In his night communique, General Weygand singled out two artillery units for special praise for the destruction they wrought among German panzer units.
"The artillery group of Commandant Pouyat destroyed 38 German tanks," he said. "One battery of this group commanded by Captain Vandelle DEFINING the word "incongruous," a schoolboy said, "There are many Senators incongruous." Right now many Senators in Congress are in the incongruous position of not knowing whether to go home or stay in session. During election year, the congressmen usually dash home to build political fences and to osculate a few babies. However, with war and defense plans cooking, the Washington gentlemen are afraid of being accused of desertion if they adjourn. The congressmen are sure of only one thing—a real hot time—either from a Washington summer or from overbated voters.

An Australian battalion has adopted a rabbit for a mascot. In this war even the mascots have to be able to move at top speed.

destroyed alone 19.
"Another artillery group commanded by Commandant Gueten, attacked at a distance of 100 meters by tanks, destroyed 17."
The allied air forces, outnumbered since the start of the campaign, stayed in the battle with one squadron of more than 100 bombers protected by both British and French pursuit planes and raining explosives on the German lines.
Some planes swooped down to an altitude of only 50 feet to bomb and machine-gun enemy tanks and troops.
Berlin Raided
An air ministry communique announced German pontoon bridges over the Somme were destroyed last night and that reichswehr reinforcements were dispersed, while navy bombers raided factories in the Berlin outskirts.
One pursuit squadron was reported to have attacked a German tank park and to have destroyed a "considerable number" of machines.
The Germans moved in two vast thrusts: From south of Roye in the Oise valley in the center, and to Forges-Les-Eaux on the west flank.
The action nearest Paris was in General Weygand's thick and heavy center line. The fighting raged on both banks of the Oise—the river whose valleys lead down to Paris—and was declared especially frightful in the deep shadows of the Ourscamp forest south of Noyon.

While the front thus erupted with new week-end violence, the French replied with bombs to the nazi raid of last Monday which killed and wounded about 1,000 Parisians.
Without giving details, the admiralty announced that a squadron of naval planes had raided factories in the outskirts of Berlin last night, and had returned without losing a ship. Speculation arose that some of the raiders might have been American-made, but the admiralty spokesman said he thought not.
General Changes
The supreme effort of the Germans had created this general change in the front:
It had fallen back from the Somme to the Bresle in the west, from Ham to the region of Noyon in the center and from the Ailette to the Aisne in the east.
Much of the slow German advance was attributed by the French to general strategic withdrawals to avoid being outflanked by the two-headed German thrust pushing down directly toward Paris on the one hand and toward Rouen in the west.

But the bulk of the French infantry and world-famous artillery still stood intact against the pounding of German tanks and dive bombers.
Too, it was disclosed for the first time that Polish artillery had joined the defenders.
On the French right flank, where some Germans crossed the Aisne yesterday east of Soissons only to be annihilated by French fire, counterattacks were reported to have cleaned up the entire south bank, reestablishing a solid front.
In Paris, from which thousands were in orderly flight, the authorities asked racing motorcyclists to enlist in a special corps of parachutists—chairs already formed by the city's motorcycle police.

Modern Noah Sighted
Ketchikan, Alaska, June 8.—(P)—Paul Satko, and his not-so-blundering ark were sighted yesterday 160 miles south of here. The crew of the motor-ship Discoverer estimated that the jobless Virginian, en route from Tacoma to Cook Inlet, might reach Ketchikan tonight.
