NEW BOOK TELLS OF RECREATION IN THE FOREST

"Forest Outings" is the title of a new 311-page book on recreational uses of the national forests of the United States.

The book was published by the department of agriculture. A copy was presented to Medford public library by Rogue River national forest headquarters. Copies will be purchased through the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C., purchasers having a choice of paper or buckram covers.

Thirty forest officers contributed to the book, their contributions being welded into a smooth story by Russel Lord as editor. The book is amply illustrated, the entire work being an example of typographical excellence.

General theme of the book may be found in the foreword by Henry A. Wallace, secretary of agriculture: "Whether it is a garden, a farm or a forest, any piece of land yielding crops may also yield repose and joy. So it is with our national forests. Millions of us already are finding simple refreshment on these great federal properties; I hope that millions of other forest guests will come. They may be sure of their welcome."

There are chapters on the use of forest campgrounds, wilderness areas and winter sports centers. The national forests of Alaska and Puerto Rico are described. Chapters are devoted to other uses of the forest, such as the production of timber, game, livestock, water and minerals. The authors tell how these uses may be administered without interference with recreation.

Throughout the book particular attention is given to the objective of providing wholesome outdoor pleasures for low-income groups.

The copy at the library may be borrowed.

GUAYULE PLANT IS PROPOSED SOURCE OF U. S. RUBBER

Salinas, Calif. (UP)—Business leaders of the Salinas valley have proposed that the United States produce its own rubber, using the Guayule plant as the source of supply.

It was pointed out that spread of warfare to the Dutch East Indies would interfere with America's principal sources of supply and the United States might be able to produce its rubber if cultivation of the Guayule plant on a large scale proves successful.

The Guayule is a plant which grows freely in any light, sandy soil of the type suitable for raising beans, barley or similar crops.

It requires 10 inches of rainfall in the winter, but can be irrigated successfully. Guayule requires a dry, dormant summer like that in California, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas.

Business groups supporting the campaign have proposed that marginal and submarginal lands, of which there are thousands of acres in the west and southwest, be devoted to growing the plant. They also have suggested that lands now producing surplus crops at loss to the farmers could be used also.

Production of Guayule was started here in 1922. It since has spread to San Joaquin and Santa Maria valleys and into southern California. About 8,000 acres are planted now and so far 175,000,000 pounds of rubber have been produced.

Unlike the rubber tree, which must be tapped, Guayule is harvested at minimum expense by plowing the plant out of the ground, grinding it under water in a pebble-mill process similar to that used in making cement, and skimming the rubber, which is lighter than water, off the top.

Dr. W. B. McCallum, botanist directing production here, reported cross-breeding and development of the weight of the rubber has increased tonnage considerably. He said the rubber averages 1,800 pounds per acre at the end of four years and 2,500 pounds after eight years.

The botanist said the plant requires little cultivation and may be plowed under at the end of four years or not before 30 years. In case of emergency, he added, the plant could be harvested in two years, although production would be less than half the amount of a four-year-old plant.

Wallace Beery And Leo Carrillo Head Cast Craterian Hit

Combining all the action and thrills of the best outdoor dramas with the uniquely picturesque background of Death Valley and three sterling performances by those veterans, Wallace Beery, Marjorie Rameau and Leo Carrillo, it is small wonder that "20 Mule Team," which opened a three-day run at the Craterian theater yesterday brought one of the biggest turnouts for a long-time time to the theater.

As Muleskinner Bill Bragg, who drives a borax train back and forth across Death Valley's treacherous flats and through the sun-baked canyons to the nearest railroad point, 162 miles away, Beery presents a characterization unequalled since "Viva Villa!" Miss Rameau is Josie Johnson, owner of the hotel and saloon where Beery is in the habit of "undehydrating" himself, and the battles between the two are reminiscent of the best draws in "Min and Bill" and "Tugboat Annie." Carrillo, as Beery's Indian "swampy," Piute Pete, repeats the success he scored with Beery in "Viva Villa!" Between the three there are a dozen laughs a minute.

Photographed in Death Valley with breathtakingly picturesque scenic background, "20 Mule Team" offers further effective characterizations by Noah Beery.

Jr., as Mitch, young borax company paymaster; by Anne Baxter, a newcomer from the New York stage, as Jean, Josie's daughter.
