Cure for Diseased Plants Found in Fumes of Sulfur

Seattle, June 19.—(P)—Science launched a new move in agriculture here today by demonstrating a method to cure a diseased plant of what had been a mortal plant illness.

The universal method of treating plant and crop diseases has been prevention. Sick crops were never cured until recently in Virginia it was discovered that benzene fumes would cure tobacco plant of the highly destructive and costly disease known as downy mildew.

Today Dr. E. C. Yarwood of the University of California, Berkeley, told the American Association for the Advancement of Science that fumes of sulfur would cure certain diseases of beans, clover, cucumbers, snapdragons and sunflowers.

He described a snapdragon with rust, a disease which yellows leaves, splits stems and which has meant that the snapdragon plant must be destroyed immediately. He placed a snapdragon which had rust for five days under a bell jar. Sulfur fumes were turned on like oxygen in a tent. In five hours the snapdragon was well.

Exactly the same quick cure happened with beans suffering from five-day-old rust.

The adventures that befall them prove to be far worse than their meek job of testing horns.
