Ten million customers can't be wronged

SOMETIMES it's hard to tell which is right—the saying that "figures don't lie" or the saying that "you can prove anything with statistics." But concerning one piece of wisdom there is general agreement—"the interests of any company are those of its customers."

* * *

About our customers and their interests we learn much from statistics. Figures show more than half the 20,000,000 motorists who buy gasoline—and thus form the very heart of our business—earn not more than $30 a week. To them price is important.

* * *

Researchers show, too, that last year the industry supplied improved gasoline at prices which represented a saving of $1,500,000,000 to motorists—when compared to the price structure for 1923, the year Uncle Sam has established as "the norm."

* * *

Too small a unit is Standard to claim credit for lowered prices throughout a large, competitive industry. Yet this Company has done its share. Long ago the figures convinced us—as we hope they'll convince you—that our interests lie with those of ordinary folks, the regular people who—in America at least—don't have to be rich or favored to consider a car part of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.
