"Waterloo Bridge" Here Sunday

With a vital and exciting background of London of the war years, 1917 and 1940, "Waterloo Bridge" comes to the Craterian Theater for a three-day run Sunday, with Vivian Leigh and Robert Taylor co-starring.

The story is woven around a dancer and an aristocratic young British officer who meet on historic Waterloo Bridge during an air raid and seek shelter in the Waterloo underground. A whirlwind courtship is telescoped into twenty-four happy hours, but before they can be married he is called to the front, later to be announced as killed in action. An almost miraculous reunion a year later closes the story.

Leon Errol, Adele Pearce Coming

Leon Errol—the guy without the hair—brings his hilarious brand of tomfoolery and nonsense to the screen of the New Rialto theater Sunday in "Pop Always Pays," as the big-talking father of Adele Pearce. When his daughter says she wants to get married, Pop says "Okay—after the boy shows me a thousand bucks in the bank. And when he does, I'll give him another thousand and my blessing." But when it does happen, Pop finds himself in the lurch—no dough and a promise to keep. Results are said to be devastating.

"Saturday's Children," co-starring John Garfield and Anne Shirley will be the second feature on the program.
