With two incredible last-inning rallies, Medford's fighting Craters captured a pair of wacky, dizzy and utterly left-handed victories from the Portland Babes yesterday to make it four straight conquests in their Oregon State league series at the fairgrounds park, and rocket to the loop leadership as Silverton dropped a couple to Jack and Jill.

The first contest, of seven frames, went to the Craters by a score of 8 to 7, thanks to a four-run explosion in the last inning. The second tilt, also slated for seven heats, flared clear into the tenth inning before the Craters could hammer over the run which gave them a 7 to 6 win.

These victories followed in the footsteps of Jimmy Rego's double blanking of the Babes in a double-header Saturday night, 1 to 0 and 5 to 0, and sent Ray Brooks and his youngsters back to Portland literally tearing their hair. For which they can't be blamed, for three of the four clashes went to Medford by a one-run margin, and in the two Sunday tilts the Babes apparently had both games riveted, only to see their laurels yanked from them by a Crater club that didn't know how to lose.

X-Rays Taken
 Practically everything that could happen in a ball game happened in those two Sunday tilts. Manager Tommy Hawkins of the Craters was accidentally beated in the eighth inning of the nightcap by one of Buster McMillan's pitches. Knocked unconscious, he finally came to and was rushed to Community hospital for x-ray pictures, which revealed that his skull was not fractured. He returned to his home and may have to remain quiet for a few days. He was not seriously hurt.

The umpires, who were given a bed time throughout the series, ousted a total of four players from both games, three of them in the wild-eyed, hysterical nightcap. Pat Patterson, and next week-end tangle with the Silverton Red Sox, here.
