MERCY FOR SALE

IN the name of the American Red Cross and today's armies of suffering mankind, we propose that you try a simple experiment. Though it may not be a pleasant one.

After you have finished reading this column, we suggest that you close your eyes for a brief moment. And listen...

Listen to the shuffling, rumbling sounds of the greatest army of all time. Listen as though this broken, weary, hungry horde of tortured humanity, of children and babes in arms were trudging endlessly by your own front door. It is the army of the homeless refugees of all Europe. They have been dispossessed of practically all that life holds dear. Many are sick and wounded. Hunger to them is an agony that knows no end.

Their need is tragic, stark and immediate. If you could will an end to this suffering, how much of it would you choose to erase? It is your contribution to the American Red Cross that measures how much this shall be. Mercy is on Humanity's bargain counter—for sale. Let's close our eyes and listen... And when you open them, we think you will want to reach in your pocket. What else can we all do?
