Rialto Hill-Billy Headliners

The Weaver Brothers and Elviry, that singing, fanning family of hill-billy entertainers, come around the mountain in their happiest laugh feature, "Grand Ole Opry," which heads the double bill opening a three-day run today at the New Rialto theater. Dad Weaver runs for governor on the straight laugh-ticket and campaigns with the dullest company of hill-billy vote-getters ever to sit in a meeting place. Lois Ranson, John Hartley and George Hay have supporting roles with the Weaver Brothers and Elviry.

"Stagecoach War," starring William Boyd as Clarence E. Mulford's Hopalong Cassidy, plays as the companion feature on the New Rialto's fun-and-thrill double bill.

Edward Robinson's Newest Picture on Craterian Program "Little Chesnut" is back in action again. This time it's a "Brother Orchid" that Edward G. Robinson is heading the mob. Opening yesterday at the Craterian theater, "Brother Orchid" is the hilarious story of an underworld big-shot who goes gunning for culture—a tailor-made role for Robinson. Members of his "mob" include the girl friend, Flo, a hot chick girl in a swank night spot. She took a good tip and before long she owned the night club. Blonde Ann Sothorn plays the role of Flo, and plays it to the hilt in another of her amazing "Missie" type of characterizations.

Then there's Jack Buck—no relation to Frank Buck. Jack always brings them back dead. He is so adept at the double-cross that he is suspicious of even himself. Buck if played by that master of misce, Humphrey Bogart.

Clarence (Ralph Bellamy) is a rancher from the wide open spaces, but he gets taken for rides so often that they're thinking of saddling him. But, blow us all down, Bellamy finally wins the girl, the first time it's happened in a movie for so long that we can't remember the last time.

Willie the Knife, a cute little cutup with a very pointed sense of humor, is played by Allen Jenkins, while others in the cast include Donald Crisp, Richard Lanz and Granville Bates.
