STETTINIUS CUTS RED TAPE IN JOB OF REARMING U.S.

Quick Action, Interest in Fellow Man Dominant Trait—Rise in World Fast

By W. B. Ragsdale Washington, July 23.—(AP)—The impulse of Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., to cut swiftly through red tape obtained quarters for his defense commission staff in three weeks shorter time than department heads thought possible.

Stettinius wanted his staff in the war department munitions building, across the street from his own office in the federal reserve building. He learned that such quarters were available and got proper authorization for them.

But one whole section of the war department needed moving. The offices needed two coats of paint. New equipment had to be brought in. Accustomed to the fast moving processes of big time business, Stettinius called the proper official and bowled him over with a request for the offices, including the moving job, the painting and the new equipment, on one day's notice.

Done In Week "But that can't be done, Mr. Stettinius," was the reply. "Maybe in a month but—" Stettinius relented enough to allow a week for the whole process of moving, painting and equipping.

It was done in a week, though it took a fleet of army trucks to do a hurry up job of hauling in the new furniture. This faculty of quick action, plus a keen and abiding interest in his fellow man, comes near to being a dominant Stettinius trait.

His interest in the man around him gave him his first job. When he was at the University of Virginia, the attention of this son of one of the country's keenest industrial organizers, the late "Ed" Stettinius, Saint Louis match manufacturer who became a partner in the Morgan banking firm, was caught by the students who were trying to work their way to an education.

He called some of his friends together, canvassed the town, listed all jobs open to college men and set up a college organization to help ambitious youngsters find a place.

First Job With G. M. The story of this work came to John L. Pratt, vice president of General Motors. A little later, after Stettinius had finished college, he showed up at the General Motors office to get permission to go through the company plants.

Pratt asked to see him when he got back, told him General Motors wanted an enlarged personnel or industrial relations program. "We'll give you a trial if you are willing to spend two or three years in the factories on a first hand study," he said. "Learn at first hand what are the problems of the men."

When Stettinius' father returned from abroad soon after, he was surprised to find his son had a job in the Hyatt roller bearing plant at Harrison, N. J., making 44 cents an hour. Here he was in the store room. Later he worked in the production sales and advertising departments, then became employment manager and assistant on industrial relations matters.

Advance Rapid The meteoric rise had started. Successively, he handled all aspects of General Motors industrial relations, was vice president in charge of industrial and public relations; directed a share of the work movement in the second federal reserve district under Alfred P. Sloan, Jr.; was liaison officer between the industrial advisory board of the national recovery administration and the administration; was vice chairman of the United States Steel corporation's finance committee; and, finally, chairman of the board of the corporation.

Such a business career might well fill a lifetime. Stettinius is still only 39, though his hair is prematurely white. Stettinius won't be found on any tennis courts or golf links around Washington. But if anyone gets up early enough, he may find the raw materials chieftain taking a long walk along the river front.

BOY GOES TO JAIL FOR FOURTH TIME ON AUTO STEALING

Melvin Carmichael of Camas Valley Has Long Record Starting at Age of 14

Roseburg, Ore., July 23.—(AP)—Melvin C. Carmichael, 19, was back in the Douglas county jail again today, the fourth time in as many years, again charged with auto theft.

The youth, who formerly resided at Camas Valley, west of Roseburg, was released from the state penitentiary in May of this year, following a sentence of two years imposed in June, 1939, after he had pleaded guilty to stealing an automobile and driving it into California. Deputy Sheriff Cliff Thornton reported.

Started Young. Carmichael's escapades started when he was 14 years old with two arrests in Oklahoma according to the records of the federal bureau of identification, Thornton said. In 1936 he was arrested at Roseburg and sentenced to the state training school for bicycle theft. Following his release in 1938 he was arrested on a charge of auto theft and was sentenced to four years in the training school, the deputy sheriff reported.

Released on parole, after serving a year, he obtained a job as a cook in a CCC camp at Tiller, and after working only a few days stole an automobile belonging to a camp foreman and drove to San Luis Obispo, where he was taken into custody and brought back to Roseburg to be sentenced to two years in the penitentiary
