Mrs. Willkie Likes to Chat But Won't Discuss Politics

By Adelaide Kerr
AP Feature Service Writer
Mrs. Wendell Willkie is a woman's woman.

She likes women and women seem to like her.

And, judging from work women have done already in his behalf, she thinks they could swing Wendell Willkie's election to the presidency.

She said so at her first New York reception after her husband's nomination, but she didn't say so publicly. Mrs. Willkie makes no public statements on political subjects. She said so in quiet agreement to a question, and then turned quickly back to greet the Republican women filing by.

A Good Time
They streamed past at a tea given in a friend's home, when she was the focal point of hundreds of curious eyes. She seemed to be having a good time—and so did the women who came to see her. A quick smile and hand clasp, and then a pause and words spilling out in a friendly stream.

"Hello, my dear. How's John?" "Helen, how nice to see you—and what a pretty frock!" I felt that, if there had been a little more time, she might have stopped to exchange a recipe.

But she talked no politics. She parried every leading question neatly and retreated with grace, determination and a smile to safer, more inconsequential ground.

Edith Willkie is a little woman, slender as a girl. Her smiling gray-blue eyes are set in a face that is wide at the cheekbones, slightly pointed at the chin and framed in short, softly curled, silver-tinged hair.

On the afternoon of the reception she wore a simple dark blue crepe frock, whose wide rippling white collar was anchored with a flower corsage and topped by a neat little chapeau crowned with white violets. Something about the tilt of that hat said, "Edith Willkie likes pretty clothes." But something she said to a friend seemed to indicate that she feels clothes aren't worth too much fuss, either.

"Will I get a lot of new clothes for the trip we hope to take before the campaign? I doubt if I'll have time. I'll probably just have to telephone some shop and tell the salesgirl to send up what I want in size twelve. It generally fits."

Enough Food and Sleep
Mrs. Willkie gives her time to her husband, her home, her son, Phillip, who is twenty. She spends much of it, since her husband's nomination, in superintending his home schedule and seeing that he gets the right food and enough sleep. She keeps a friendly, homey atmosphere in the roomy, book-filled apartment on upper Fifth avenue, where the Willkies live.

The Republican women who help her handle the bushel-baskets of mail that pour in these days say that if they don't watch her, she is likely to wait on those who are there to help instead of letting them wait on her. The other day, when they were having a hasty lunch, she disappeared into the kitchen and came back with a tray of iced orange juice because she thought they "might like a cool drink."

But she gets time for other things. She reads a lot of economics and her friends wonder if she isn't a help to Wendell Willkie in keeping him primed on events and on reading for which he has no time. Be that as it may, they say, she has followed every step of his career. They suspect she may be one person to whom Willkie's nomination as the Republican presidential candidate came as no surprise.
