BRITAIN ALREADY LEASES PACIFIC ISLES AIR BASES

America Closes Deal Long Pending for 50 Years—Joint Control.

London, Aug. 21.—(AP)—British foreign office sources today confirmed reports the United States had leased the islands of Canton and Enderby in the southern Pacific from Great Britain as air bases. The lease, these sources said, is for 50 years, with a provision that it can be extended indefinitely.

These sources said there was "no question of price or considerations" in the arrangement. Britain and the United States had decided of joint control before the war, following a dispute over ownership in 1938.

Foreign office sources said the subject was raised to illustrate the statement of Prime Minister Churchill yesterday that "the principle of association of interests for common purposes between Great Britain and the United States had developed even before the war. Various agreements had been reached about certain small islands in the Pacific ocean which had become important as air refueling points."

Canton and Enderby islands, mere dots on the map of the Pacific, came under the joint control of the United States and Great Britain April 6, 1939, by virtue of a 50-year agreement, reached after a year's negotiations as to their ownership.

The agreement provided that the islands, part of the Phoenix group, lying midway between Hawaii and Australia, should serve as way stations on the air route between the United States and Australia. It also provided that the islands be administered by a United States official and a British official.
