No WPA Politics
Portland, Ore., Sept. 7.—(P)—Dallas Dort of Washington, D. C., assistant WPA commissioner, told interviewers yesterday the WPA "definitely will stay out of the presidential campaign."

Medford plant of the Knight Packing firm is in the market for surplus tomatoes and will pay as much for them as is being paid anywhere in the Rogue River valley, it was announced yesterday by Harry Dorman of Portland, company president who came here to look over the local unit. In addition to supplies from the 58 acres the company has under contract, the Medford plant is now in a position to handle a surplus supply of 15 tons of tomatoes daily, Mr. Dorman said. Employment at the plant would be increased materially if the company can get the additional tomatoes, he added. At peak operations the plant employs 35 workers and it is desired to operate at peak capacity now, he related. Any growers interested in disposing of surplus tomatoes may contact William Drumm, general manager of the Knight plant here. Last year the Medford plant packed 27,000 cases of tomato juice, catsup, chili sauce and cocktail sauce. All the products, two millions separate packages last year, bear a Rogue River label and thus advertise the valley.

The Knight plant here has been in operation 14 years. It is the only plant in Oregon where catsup is produced.

ASHLAND SCHOOLS OPENING MONDAY
Ashland, Sept. 7.—(Sp)—Public schools in this city will open Monday morning, September 9 for the beginning of the 1940-41 term. Theo J. Norby, city school superintendent, formally announced. Registration at the high school has been under way the past week although official figures have not been revealed. It was indicated that there is possibility of a slight increase in the enrollment. Leighton Blake, new football coach, reported that 28 hopefuls had turned out for initial football practice. The schedule will call for a number of home games some under the lights.

City Official Resigns
McMinnville, Sept. 7.—(P)—Leslie Farnham resigned as city commissioner last night to answer the national guard mobilization call. He is a lieutenant in the guard.

Winter sports releases or "snowcasts" will be discontinued this year by the division of irrigation, soil conservation service, U. S. department of agriculture. In announcing discontinuance of the informative service, R. A. Work, associate irrigation engineer, explained that increasing demands in the strictly research field made it necessary to cease the preparation of the "snowcasts" which have been published by the Mail Tribune and other newspapers for the past three years. The "snowcasts" included information regarding weather, travel and sports conditions at winter playgrounds in the southern Oregon and northern California areas.

Buy a New Dress and Cast a Vote For New Ruler Of Style Trend

By Amy Porter
A.P. Fashion Writer.
This is election year in the fashion world.
Another 12 months will see the names of a few designers emerge as dictators of style, successors of Paris.
You'll cast your vote, whether you realize it or not, whenever you buy a dress. Because some American designer will have thought it up, and every sale of his creation will increase his chances to be an originator, rather than a follower, of style trends.
The fashion industry in America is busy cooking up names for you.
The manufacturer who never before gave public recognition to the hard-working designer in his office is now busily trying to get the designer's name into fashion headlines.
French Names Pass Out.
It's good-bye to French names such as Mainbocher, Lanvin, Legend, and hello to such American names as Clare Potter, Nettie Rosenstein, Dorothy Cox, Jo Copeland.
But do you care? Did you ever care?
When the salesgirl used to say, "This is a Schiaparelli model, very impressive" or did you say, "Um hum, but I don't like the color. Show me that green dress over there."
The mayor of New York, who is just as desirous as anybody that New York become the world's style center, has an idea that all the excitement about the loss of Paris design service is so much nonsense.
Says They Don't Care.
At a meeting with the fashion press, he argued that most American women don't know or care who designs their clothes, so long as they are pretty. To prove his point he called in his secretary and said, "Can you name five designers for me, please?"

The secretary hesitatingly said, "Well, Clare Potter," and stopped right there.
As for French style leadership, American designers will make their own trends—and get more pay.
And salesgirls will forget Paris names and learn to say instead, "It's a John Doe model, very new, very smart."
Perhaps you still won't care, but the names you hear repeated most often will decide what length your skirt will be, whether your belt hits you above or below your middle, and how wide will be the shoulder effect.
If you care which way the fashion winds blow, you'd better get in there and root for the designers who make the kind of clothes you like.
Mayor LaGuardia has an interesting theory.
"I can tell you why Paris set styles," he said. "It was because the buyers all liked to go to Paris for a holiday."
Most of the clothes worn in America have always been designed by Americans. The only thing we got from Paris was that mysterious something called "trends."
Must Make Own Trends.
Paris decided whether skirts should be wide or narrow, long or short, and how bulky shoulders should be. American designers bowed to Paris trends, went on alone from there.

Rep. White (D., Ida.) said he would not vote for the bill. He said he opposed conscription unless a war was imminent and added that such is not now the case.
Rep. Dworshak (R., Ida.) said: "I favor conscription of both men and material resources in war time. But we are still at peace and there is no justification for such a radical innovation."
