

Old Logtown Cemetery Restored Through Effort of Small Group

Big Applegate, May 22.—(Spl.)—A little band of people, with a common goal, and a lot of stick-to-itiveness are restoring the cemetery of historic Logtown.

The little burial spot was near oblivion, when Mrs. Ed Smith at Ruch snatched it back into permanency by compiling a record of its graves. Two years ago the Logtown cemetery association was formed, and a name plate and gateway of rustic design were erected, letting the passing public know that the cemetery existed just off the Jacksonville-Ruch highway.

And now it is the hope of the association to build a rustic fence of logs across the front of the grounds, and to connect new wire fencing at the sides. Sanitary facilities also will be erected. It is to accomplish this that another work day has been scheduled for Sunday, May 25, according to Mrs. Harry Whitney of Jacksonville, publicity chairman. Everyone is asked to bring a basket lunch, and to meet at the cemetery at 10 a. m. Two weeks ago forty people from various sections of the county met and held a highly successful work-day.

The association held its annual meeting and election of officers at Ruch Thursday with Glenn Smith and Mrs. Anna Davies new members of the board of directors. Mrs. Bill Winningham of Medford and Leonard McKee of Jacksonville retain their membership on the board with John Black as chairman.

Burials still take place in the little cemetery. The first occurred in 1862 when James Dunlap was laid to rest. The parents of John Jeffrey, Portland attorney, also are buried there.

Logtown, now extinct, was a busy little mining village of 500 people at the junction of Forest and Poor Man's creek in the early 50's. The town sprang up on the Jacksonville-Crescent City pack trail.

Draw Bridge Traps Woman

Miss Katherine Geyer, 69, was trapped on the north end of the Fremont draw bridge in Seattle when the span began to rise. She fell to within a few feet of the grinding gears but the bridge tender stopped his motor just in time. Firemen are helping the bewildered woman off the bridge. She was reported to have suffered a brain concussion.

EXTENSION UNITS PART IN DEFENSE TO BE DISCUSSED

A discussion of national defense and ways in which the defense program may be adapted to extension unit projects in Jackson county during the coming year will be featured in a talk by Mrs. Azalea Sager, state home demonstration leader from Oregon State college, who will be here Monday for annual program planning day. The meeting will be held at the court house auditorium, opening at 10 a. m., it was announced by Mrs. Jacqueline B. Jones, county home demonstration agent.

Mrs. Sager will meet with representatives from the various units, and parent education study clubs of the county to outline the work program for 1941-1942. Miss Izola Jensen, recreation specialist from the college, also will discuss the recreation program with the leaders from the recreation clubs in the county.

During the coming year the parent education work will be incorporated in the extension unit programs instead of being given through study clubs, Mrs. Jones explained. This change is due to the fact that Mrs. Buena

M. Maris, extension specialist in parent education, who has given this work in the county for the last three years, now is serving on the residence staff of the college as dean of women. Mrs. Maris succeeds Dean Kate W. Jamison, who is retiring.

Public Notice

Canned Food

YOUR Federal Government has recently devoted a great deal of attention and gone to considerable expense to curb certain practices of misrepresentation on the part of some canners and distributors of canned goods.

Citations have been made covering misrepresentations of quality, grading and labeling.

Unless these cited packers and distributors adopt higher standards of quality and more truthful practices of gradings—strict measures will be taken by the proper authorities on behalf of the public welfare.

It is here suggested to housewives that greater care be exercised in "giving preference" to brands marketed by packers and distributors of known integrity. It is also suggested that more attention be paid to the sizes of tins offered at stated prices.

Experience has demonstrated that little-known brands no matter how cheap they appear, may prove very unsatisfactory from the standpoint of flavor and texture and from the standpoint of value received.

As a safeguard it is advised that consumers confine their purchasing to brands of recognized merit and distributed by firms of known responsibility. Only by exercising this precaution can consumers be assured of obtaining honest values. Only by such precautions can consumers be assured of highest quality, proper grading and maximum value for every shopping dollar.

For absolute top quality, Royal Club canned foods can be purchased with complete confidence. This brand has been a leading seller in this community for 55 years. In the standard, lower priced bracket, Meco foods are recommended. Both are featured by leading independent retail grocers.
