

DOUBLED OUTPUT OF PLANES, ARMS, IS URGED BY OPM

Knudsen Reveals Plans to Step Up Bomber Production to 500 Per Month

Washington, May 23.—(AP)—Authoritative congressional sources declared today that the Office of Production Management has been urging the war department to almost double its $5,500,000,000 estimates for the year ahead, to permit a tremendous new expansion in production of bombers, tanks and other arms.

William S. Knudsen, OPM director, announced one step toward increasing the nation's—and Britain's—air striking force when he disclosed yesterday that four new contracts were being negotiated to step up production of long-range four-motored heavy bombers to 500 a month.

Four Million Army Goal
At the same time, Jesse Jones, federal loan administrator, allocated $650,000,000 to construct new government-owned airplane, aluminum and magnesium plants. Magnesium and aluminum are widely used in the manufacture of defense goods, particularly airplanes.

Capping those two developments, well-informed legislators said army officers had told them the OPM was advocating that the war department appropriate a bill for the year starting July 1 be increased by $4,000,000,000 or $5,300,000,000 to finance a vastly expanded bomber and tank output and to provide all equipment for a 4,000,000-man army.

William Hillman, associate OPM director, said in New York last night that although the present defense program calls for an outlay of $42,000,000,000, "further and vaster sums will probably have to be expended."

Equipment For 2,000,000
At present, the army's program calls for 1,418,000 men in training by June 30 and for provision of full equipment for 2,000,000 men. Congress voted approximately $750,000,000 earlier this year to provide the productive facilities required to turn out sufficient arms and material to maintain a 4,000,000-man ground force on a combat status.

The air corps is engaged on a 21,000-plane program for which contracts already have been let and which, with the navy and British-aid contracts requires an annual capacity of about 36,000 planes. Defense production sources recently disclosed that the need for heavy bombers had increased to such an extent that a productive capacity of 80,000 planes yearly was under consideration.

5,000 TURKEYS ON APPLGATE RANCH

Big Applegate, May 23.—(Sp)—Engaging in the largest turkey raising project ever undertaken here, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Harrington are preparing to receive 3,400 baby turks at their ranch on Humburg creek on lower Applegate next month. The Harringtons already have 1,600 five-week old birds of the bronze breed.

They expect to let the turkeys run on the surrounding range with the protection of a herder. The fowls, being purchased from Mrs. H. E. Hammel near Eagle Point, are the object of great interest, and large numbers of visitors come to this farm to see the flocks. Mr. and Mrs. Harrington have resided on the Bolt place since December, having come here from Klamath Falls.

Harvard's Hooton Doubles Bard on 7 Ages of Man

Boston — (UP) — Shakespeare wrote of the seven ages of man, but Prof. Ernest A. Hooton, noted Harvard anthropologist, has decided that—medically speaking—there are at least 14 ages. And he doesn't approve.

Each age stands for a different medical specialist, according to Hooton, and the person who gets through life consulting only 14 specialists "has never been anywhere nor seen anything." He only had a "cheap excursion and no luxury cruise."

Hooton starts off his "pathological ages of man" with the obstetrician who presides over our destiny from conception to birth, and ends with the cardiologist (No. 14) who "broods over our arteriosclerosis, hypertension, or what not, until we get a coronary thrombosis and are passed on to the mortician." The latter is given a number by Hooton, who is author of the controversial book, "Up from the Ape."

Following the obstetrician in Hooton's list is the pediatrician, "who bewails our thumb-sucking and conceals our feeding formulae," the dentist and the otolaryngologist, who extracts our tonsils and adenoids.

No. 5 on his list parade is the optician. Hooton thinks that

"before we learn to read (he) convicts us of strabismus, nystagmus, myopia, hypermetropia, astigmatism, or aniseikonia, and sentences us to spectacles for life."

From the optician, it is only a short step to the pedophysiologist who tries to cure our Oedipus complex. Hooton says. And then comes the orthodontist, who straightens our teeth.

Now with the approach of adolescence, "the abdominal surgeon catches us with a persistent stomach ache and does an appendectomy." Acne, hay-fever, hives, eczema and digestive insurrection move in with adolescence, Hooton says, and that attracts the allergist.

He scratches and injects, "ultimately demonstrating that we can wear nothing but silk, eat nothing but spinach and breathe only during stated seasons." By this time our feet are flat and our backs ache . . . so that the orthopedic surgeon (No. 10) puts us in a straight-jacket and prescribes corrective exercises which we do not do . . .

With maturity comes matrimony and the psychoanalyst. He "dives into our dreams, the errors of our upbringing and the cesspools of our subconscious minds, and untangles the old-hard, granny-knots in our personality, so that we decide to get a divorce."

Next comes the gynecologist and the diagnostician—"who tests our endocrine balance and finds that it does not possess even an unstable equilibrium"—and finally the cardiologist.

Hooton gave his version of the ages of man in a lecture called "Hip, Hip, Hippocrates!" or an Anthropological cheer for medical science."

He told the American College of Physicians that "as long as medical science consists mainly of disconnected, ex post facto patchings by isolated specialists, working mainly in ignorance of the patient's past . . . we may look for no general improvement of total human quality."

"At best we may expect skillful and efficient repair work upon discrete parts as they successively or simultaneously get out of kilter."
