4-H STYLE SHOW WEDNESDAY NIGHT AT COURT HOUSE

The second 4-H club spring style show, sponsored annually by the Medford Business and Professional Women's club, will be held in the courthouse auditorium, Wednesday, May 28 at 8 p. m., L. E. Francis, county club agent, said Saturday. Costumes for the style revue will be provided by the Jacque Lenox Shop under direction of Mrs. Lenox and the M. M. department store under direction of Jane Hanson, and will be representative of the four major divisions in the 4H clothing projects, which are—the school dress, the street dress, the best dress and the informal party dress.

Music will be provided by a group of Eve Prentice's accordions directed by Robert E. Wenk. Piano music for the style revue will be played by Laura York.

Models for the Jacque Lenox shop will be Carlyn Hill, a member of the BPW club and Barbara Brewer; models for the M.M. department store will be announced later. The style revue will be under general direction of Jacqueline B. Jones, county home demonstration agent who will discuss each costume as it is modeled.

Following the revue refreshments will be served by the BPW club and the Jackson County 4-H Leaders association. All club girls, their leaders and mothers, are invited to attend. The principle object of holding the style revue, states Mr. Francis, is to give the 4H club members instruction in modeling costumes so that they will be better trained for participation in their own 4H club activities of a similar nature and also to give the girls ideas on the current styles to assist them in selecting and designing the dresses for their projects.

The event is a part of the BPW club's participation in the county 4H home economic program. The group also sponsors the 4H Home Economics Fair held in August. The BPW club committee which is working with the 4H club people and will be in charge of the show, is headed by Jacque Lenox as chairman.

STUDENT BENT ON SUICIDE AND HIS RESCUER PERISH

A suicide-intent flying student and his would-be rescuer crashed to their deaths Saturday after a dramatic struggle in the air for control of a training plane.

Dead were William D. Woodward, 20, and John K. Blaupied, 21.

Coroner Lang P. Bowman said three notes found in Woodward's automobile indicated the youth intended to crash. One was addressed to a girl friend, John Knightly, employe of the flying school who witnessed the takeoff and crash, told this story:

Woodward arrived at the school early Saturday and taxied out a two-seat, dual-control trainer of a type heavier than he was qualified to fly.

Blaupied, also a student pilot, ran across the field and climbed onto a wing of the advancing craft. He reached into the cockpit and cut the switch, but Woodward threw the ignition on again and managed to get the plane into the air.

Again Blaupied cut the switch, and again Woodward caught up the sputtering motor. Then as the rocking plane alternately lost and gained altitude, Blaupied climbed into the unoccupied front cockpit, gesturing and shouting.

He reached back, struggled with Woodward, but the latter put the plane into a dive.

The ship crashed in a meadow near the airport, strewn wreckage over an area of 150 yards. It did not burn. Both bodies were mangled.
