Advance Guard of R. A. F.
Cadets Eager to Glimpse
Hollywood Celebrities.

Los Angeles, June 5.—(P)—Fifty English schoolboys, the advance guard of 7,000 RAF cadets, who soon will be training in six United States air schools, arrived here today and wanted to know, first of all, how soon they could see some of the movie stars.

Greeting the youths, whose ages range from 17 to 23, were Capt. L. J. Douglas-Martin of the British air commission at Washington, and Squadron Leaders T. G. Whitlock and R. S. Mills. They will begin training at once at the Polaris Flight Academy, Glendale, under supervision of Maj. C. C. Moseley, whose Cal-Aero school is training fliers for the U. S. army air corps.

150 Hours Coming
The English youth will get in 150 hours of combat flying on Vultee and North American training planes, and then return to England to receive 40 hours of instruction in gunnery before being assigned to RAF squadrons.

"Under the lend-lease bill the United States furnishes equipment, gasoline and oil and England pays the tuition fees and expenses of the men," said Capt. Douglas-Martin. "We are setting up schools in six sections of the United States to train combat pilots. By August 13 we expect to have 7,000 youths in training here, and an additional 2,500 will be attending a navigation school at Miami, Fla.

In Groups of 50
"At Glendale 200 cadets will be in training at all times. They will come in groups of 50 and be graduated in groups. Another 100 boys have arrived in Toronto and will be here in a few days."

There will be 41 primary and 45 advanced training planes for the training.

Squadron Leader Mills, who will supervise the training here, is a veteran of RAF battles in France and Norway and in the battle of Britain.

TRIBUNE CARRIERS ATTAIN HONORS IN SCHOLASTIC FIELD

Eleven Members of High School Graduating Class
Boast Carrier Experience

Eleven members of the class graduated from Medford high school last week were Mail Tribune carriers or former carriers and sellers, a compilation of records today showed. Several of the carriers and former carriers received honors.

The 11 were Leigh Blew, Robert Brewer, Ralph Brock, Robert Buckles, Robert Childers, Douglas Eden, Carleton Fanger, Arnold Joki, Robert Kitson, Wayne Kyker and Ernest Winkle. Those who were carriers at the time of graduation were Fanger, Brewer, Joki and Brock.

Fanger salutatorian of the class, Joki stood fifth in class rating and Brock 15th. There were 167 in the class all told.

In addition to being second in his class, Fanger received the Torch honor, an honorary science award and an Oregon State college scholarship. Joki also received a scholarship from Oregon State. Brewer received a music award.

A Mail Tribune carrier, Creighton Thompson, was graduated from Gold Hill high school and a former carrier, John Bergstrom, was graduated from Ashland high school.

Experience Helps

Speaking of the scholastic records established by the carriers and former carriers, Gerald T. Latham, Mail Tribune circulation manager, said: "In addition to their formal education, students who carry or sell the Mail Tribune receive experience in fundamental business principles, in selling, collecting and book-keeping. In handling routes, they are in business for themselves under contract to buy and resell papers and so they encounter the same problems as any merchant in a specialized line. They are trained also to give prompt and accurate service."

"In dealing with the public, they become self-reliant and build up confidence in themselves. Thus they are better equipped to carry on their studies and are better prepared to enter the business work after leaving school."
