

STABBING VICTIM MAKING RECOVERY SAYS PHYSICIAN

The condition of Lee Cook, 17-year-old CCC boy who is confined in Sacred Heart hospital with severe knife wounds he suffered in a scuffle with another CCC youth Saturday night, was reported today as "very satisfactory." Although seriously injured and suffering from loss of blood, Cook's condition was not expected by his attending physician to prove critical.

Ormond Sullivan, 19, who, according to city police, signed a statement admitting he slashed Cook about the head, face and arms in a fracas in front of a service station at Sixth and Front streets about 8 o'clock Saturday night, was held in city jail today. Police said he would probably be charged with assault with a deadly weapon and arraigned in justice of the peace court this afternoon.

Cook, police said, undoubtedly owed his life to the quick and expert first aid rendered him by Owen K. Phelan of 732 West Second street, a service representative for the California-Oregon Power company. Phelan, police related, was standing in the Holbrook and Andrews furniture store, 18 North Front street, when a CCC boy ran in shouting for a doctor.

Phelan immediately ran into the street and saw Cook, bleeding profusely from 11 long and deep knife wounds, lying on the sidewalk where he had fainted from loss of blood. Phelan, police explained, clamped the fingers of one hand on a spurting gash on Cook's neck and, with the other hand, stopped the flow of blood from a bad cut on Cook's upper left arm. Tenaciously, he retained his grip on the two arteries until City Policeman Clyde Fichtner arrived at the scene and aided in stopping the flow of blood.

After the Perl ambulance arrived to remove Cook to the hospital, Phelan and the city officer continued to hold the blood flow in check on the ride to the hospital and right into the surgery. Cook, police said, was bleeding from three cuts on the scalp, a bad slash on the neck that just missed the spinal column, one under the left shoulder pit, one on the left upper arm from his shoulder to his elbow, one on the forearm and several other lesser wounds.

Phelan, like all Copco employees, is an expert at emergency first aid, the company giving Red Cross first aid lessons to all its workers.

Police said that Sullivan, in his statement, revealed he had taken several drinks Saturday night, and quoted him as explaining that the knife he allegedly used in the scuffle was two-bladed, with blades two and a half inches long.

GRAIN, CHERRIES DAMAGED BY RAIN

Milton-Freewater, Ore., June 9.—(AP)—Torrential rains halted the cherry harvest, leveled the dry creek area grain crop and covered south Milton streets with mud Friday.

Cherry growers said losses would run into thousands of dollars since only four of an estimated 95 cars of cherries had been shipped before the deluge halted picking.

The pea harvest, expected to begin today, also was delayed.

Gala Opening at Rogue River Lodge Will Lure Throng

Advance registrations today indicated a large attendance at the summer opening of Rogue River lodge, the popular resort on the breeze-cooled banks of the sparkling Rogue river near Trail, next Saturday evening.

Dining and dancing in the spacious lodge will be pleasant diversions as a climax to the celebration of Flag day, the management has pointed out.

Abbie Green, with his piano and "solovox" will be featured. The "solovox" is an attachment that gives the piano such sonority as to stimulate an orchestra. Green is well known here, having at one time led an orchestra, the "Nite Hawks," a dance band of versatile University of Oregon students, in Medford.

Genevieve McCorkle, known affectionately as "Mrs. Mac" is now chef at the lodge. She has had years of experience in running a large kitchen.

BLONDE TRESSES PRECEDE BRUNETTE IN DEFENSE WORK

San Francisco (AP)—Blondes will have an opportunity to play a far greater role than brunettes in building up the army weather service to meet the demands of the new national defense program, according to weather bureau officials.

This favoritism, they explain, comes from the fact that blonde hairs are far superior to brunette strands for the radiosondes that are sent into the stratosphere by small balloons to record weather data and wireless the reading to the ground. The hairs are used in recording humidity.

While no scientific explanation for this phenomenon has been found, the superiority is so great that only blonde hairs will be used in the program, which includes the establishing of 700 weather stations on behalf of the army and a greater extension of the regular U. S. weather service.

Eighteen blonde hairs are needed in each radiosonde for the humidity recorder. As the transporting balloon usually blows up and the transmitter parachutes to the ground, many are lost or the hairs ruined in landing. Hence, weather bureau officials predict a heavy demand for blonde hairs for the next few years.

Development of the weather service of the government and the army, weather bureau and army officials explain, is made necessary by the new national defense program and especially that for the aviation branch.

The air corps' army of meteorologists, they point out, will work in much the same role as diplomatic emissaries gaging the mood of the temperamental mogul of the weather for the day and giving the all-clear or stay-down signals which make flying safe.

The calculations of the army's new corps of meteorologists will be based on the equivalent of six years of study, beginning with four years of university training and topped with a stiff two-year course in meteorology at a private school or a similar but faster course at one of the air corps' two meteorological schools.

Each station will receive four reports a day, which will be recorded on four surface synoptic maps, which give information on wind speed, wind direction, clouds, ceiling, visibility, temperature and dew point, barometric tendencies and whatever other weather conditions exist.
