

MANY RECREATION USES ARE OFFERED IN FORESTS NOW

The following recreational bulletin was issued today by Rogue River national forest headquarters:

"In spite of recent rains, many parts of the Rogue River national forest are in good condition for recreation use.

"The Applegate district is now at its best, with an exceptionally luxuriant cover of green grass and wild flowers adding to the beauty of the timbered areas. The Ashland loop road is open from the Applegate side to Duichman peak and from Ashland to Ashland peak, past which points it is blocked with snow. The clear atmosphere permits better visibility from this road than will be had later in the summer, providing wide vistas of snow-covered peaks and intermingling many-colored valleys. Picking of wild flowers and play in the snow may be enjoyed within a few feet of the same point, and the forest camps along the road are warm and dry enough for pleasant picnicking. The Applegate river and its tributaries are now clear, offering better fishing than earlier in the spring.

"In the Union Creek district Rogue river is too muddy for fishing below Bybee creek; above that point good catches are being made with flies. Tributary streams are still quite high. The Herschberger road and the old Diamond lake road are open to travel; roads in the vicinity of Woodruff Meadows are badly rutted by logging trucks.

"In the Lake O' Woods district roads are still quite muddy, but if the sunshine continues until Sunday they will be in good shape. Fair catches of eastern brook trout by still fishing with cluster eggs and worms are being made at Fish lake; in Four Mile lake the same bait is bringing limit catches of silversides. The road to Four Mile, while rough and narrow, is in as good condition as it will be any time during the season. A few silversides are being caught in Lake O' Woods by trolling. Fishing in Hyatt lake is reported poor, with many catfish dying in shallow water along the shore. Many deer are being seen throughout this district and at the air field at Lake O' Woods. As many as 30 have been counted at one time in the early evenings. Bears are also frequently seen near the less-traveled roads in this vicinity."

Questions M. T. Hess Analysis.
To the editor: As a prize-winning analyzer (in today's M. T.), I think you are more successful than in explaining the Hess mystery (in yesterday's M. T.).

Your arguments in support of the theory that Hitler ordered Hess' flight to England hold together fairly well, except on one point you mention and one you omit.

The first is Hitler's threat that if England refused to make peace, Germany would join with Russia, as an ally. You make it appear that Russia is ready and waiting to go all out as an ally of Germany. Such is far from the case. Hitler knows how uncertain and reluctant is Russia as an ally, and Hitler is probably smart enough to realize the futility of trying to convince the British to the contrary.

The second point, omitted by you, is that Hess took his life in his hands. His plane was riddled with bullets. You may refuse to believe that report. But it is established beyond all reasonable doubt that Hess was forced to "ball-out" at night, a very risky procedure, especially for a man getting along in years and not trained in parachute jumping. Furthermore, it is well established that Hess broke, or at least seriously injured, his ankle.

If Hitler had planned Hess' visit, he could have arranged, through any of numerous channels of communication still open between Germany and England, for a much gentler trip for Hess. For example, Hess' plane could have carried some identification previously agreed upon between the belligerents, and thus have been spared by the R.A.F. I fancy the English might even have been induced to allow Hess to return to Germany, all strictly on the Q.T., of course. Stranger examples of cooperation between enemies are on record.

As it was, the Nazis were indubitably put on the spot by Hess' action. Party morale was shaken, and a great deal of "explaining" was necessary.
