Super Sleuth on Rialto Screen

Ralph Bellamy is again starred as Ellery Queen, master detective, and Margaret Lindsay once more appears as Nikki Porter in "Ellery Queen's Penthouse Mystery," which comes to the Rialto Theatre for tomorrow and Saturday. The film also features Anna May Wong, Charlie Grapewin and Eduardo Ciannelli. "Trail Blazers," starring the Three Mesquiteros, will play as the added Western with the murder-thriller.

That Charlie Chaplin's new picture was eagerly awaited by valley showgoers was proven last night with the largest theatre crowds seen here for many a day for the opening of "The Great Dictator" at the Craterian Theatre for a four-day run. All boxoffice records were smashed as hundreds of fans were turned away at the boxoffice. It is safe to assume that, when the run of "The Great Dictator" is over, an all-time high will have been established in attendance records.

With Jack Oakie, in the greatest role of his career heading the supporting cast, "The Great Dictator" presents the whole world knows becoming dictator of the very country he is trying to flee. Because he resembles the real dictator, and vice versa, the tramp becomes the power in the country and the "big shot" gets tossed into a concentration camp. The picture shows Charlie as the Chaplin a past generation hailed as king of comedy, with the first quarter hour of the picture very reminiscent of "Shoulder Arms"—one continual round of laughter! It also presents Charlie out of character at the close, addressing the world with all the passion and eloquence at his command on the condition of humanity at this time.

In the 95 minutes separating these antipodes, the picture offers comedy and tragedy, satire and melodrama, slapstick and sentiment in alternation with Chaplin—star, writer and director—claiming his due in a production that compares in kind to no predecessor from any film studio.
