

HEARTBREAK HONEYMOON

YESTERDAY: There is only one fly in Luella's ointment, and that is a girl named Marie, who sings glamorous songs on the air, and once almost married Luella's Henry. But now Henry and Luella are really married, and going on to New York where Henry has a big new job. And Marie and her admirer Tommy are talking about them, for Marie just has rung a song that Henry wrote years before.

Chapter Three
"That Man Again"
"ALL I've got to say is that it looks to me like you've been holding out on me," Tommy declared.
"Don't get all disturbed," said Marie. "Tommy, my lad, the man called Henry is married."
"Oh!"
"He was married early this afternoon, and he's right now on his way to New York."
"Coming up for his honeymoon!"
"He's killing two birds with one ticket, so to speak. He's coming up on his honeymoon, but staying to take over a new job."
"Say, how do you know so much about what he's doing?"
"I read the hometown papers."
"Meaning he's an important personage in the old hometown?"

"Don't get all disturbed," said Marie.

"Not exactly, although he has made good. But smalltown papers always play up personal items, you know."
"You mean he turned to a girl who didn't want a career? Is that it?"
"Yes, Tommy."
"And you settled the matter by coming up to become one of radio's shining lights?"
Marie nodded. "And," she said, "Henry Peil has settled it even more definitely and conclusively by marrying Luella."
"I'm glad," said Tommy. "Now you're free to marry me. We ought to get along famously, you and I—being a singer, and me on the way toward becoming a big radio executive. So dry those tears, my lamb, and let's go dancing."
He drew Marie to him, held her close. "Shall we go up to the Rainbow Room without stepping out into the night, or would you prefer a less spectacular joint?"
"Let's go to some quiet spot, Tommy, if you don't mind," was Marie's reply. She smiled a little wistfully. "I don't feel up to mixing in with a lot of people. Already I'm asked for my autograph, and all that sort of nuisance."
"Nuisance!" Tommy exclaimed. "Why, listen, Beautiful! It's autograph seekers and writers of fan letters who keep you where you are."
"Yes, I know, Tommy. . . I'm sorry. . . But I don't want to be recognized tonight. All of a sudden I feel like an old lady who has just discovered a faded rose pressed between the leaves of a dime program. I keep thinking of the past."
"You, like an old lady?" Tommy laughed. "You're twenty-six. Don't forget I know that, Marie. It's a grand age!"
"Thanks, Tommy," Marie said, brightening. "You are a comfort to me."
"Yes, I know. . . You said that before."
"But I can't feel terribly excited over you," Marie added. "I often wonder how I'd ever have gotten where I am without your help and encouragement, and I shall be everlastingly grateful to you, but—"
"I expected that," said Tommy. "Damned bothersome word, that 'but' . . . I get it. . . What you're trying to say is that you are grateful to me, but I don't make your heart leap when I draw near. That's not talk about that, Tommy," said Marie.
