

HEARTBREAK HONEYMOON

by WATKINS E. WRIGHT

YESTERDAY: Luella Pell is not sure whether she is glad or sorry that at last her lonely life in New York is broken by having guests for dinner. Her husband is Henry, and Henry seems a little too much interested in Marie Mason, the radio star. Luella thinks Marie is neglecting Tommy McIntyre, her fourth guest, and is sure she is not neglecting Henry.

Chapter Eight

Marie Stumbles

THEY lingered for a time over their coffee, laughing, chatting, relaxed and content. Then they moved into the other end of the room. Patsy placed a four panel screen around the dining-room end, and went about clearing the things away.

"I'm much too full of your grand dinner to concentrate on cards," said Tommy.

"And there's so much to talk about," Marie added. "Besides, I'm a terrible bridge player. I simply can't remember some of the simplest conventions."

"About this Malcolm Rector," said Henry. "Has he anything up his sleeve, Marie—I mean of interest to you?"

"I should say so!" was Marie's reply. "And of interest to you too, Henry. His company is planning a program that's to be entirely non-commercial. I mean there'll be no interruptions while some-one spouts about the virtues of a headache or dog food or a breakfast food or a medicine. And he's considering using me on the program."

"That's great!" Henry said. "But where do I come in? I mean, you said it was of interest to me also."

"Your songs. If I get on the program, Henry, I'll want some new material. And I liked the idea you mentioned the other day at lunch."

Luella, who had been placing ash-trays within easy reach of everyone stopped and looked up. "I hope," said Marie, giving Luella a wide-eyed look, "that you didn't object to my stealing Henry for lunch."

"I didn't know anything about it," said Luella. "You and Henry have a lot in common," she went on. "So why shouldn't you get together now and then and talk things over?"

"That's what I think," said Marie.

"And I'd say, Luella, that you were being a swell, broad-minded wife," Tommy remarked. "I hope Marie will be as broad-minded when and if she marries me, and I meet a glamorous movie star or actress or radio personality for lunch or cocktails."

Marie, restless, lovely, got up and began to move about the room. "I adore all these old-fashioned things you brought up from home," she said. "I wish I hadn't sold all mine in order to get money enough to start singing lessons." She pulled back the brocade hangings. "Such a quiet street—for New York."

"The rear windows open on an even quieter scene," said Henry. "Come on, I'll show you. There's an extension roof, and when warm weather comes, I plan to have an awning and porch furniture. Luella and I may even have our breakfasts out there. And dinners too, when we can manage it."

"Oh, that'll be fun!" said Marie. "I love eating out in the open. I'll be almost like having a terrace."

She followed Henry down the long room to the rear.

Invitation in Her Eyes

THERE Henry opened a full-length window, and they stepped out upon the extension. It looked out over a quiet back yard in which grew a single tree that was now putting forth tender green leaves. One of the larger branches hung down over the extension and gave the place something of a rural atmosphere.

"It's lovely!" said Marie. "I'm sorry now I didn't take a place like this, instead of an apartment in one of the newer houses." She walked toward the end of the roof, and looked down into the yard. "It makes me think a little of some of the back yards down home."

"Careful," Henry cautioned. "I don't think that roof's any too firm. I've got to have it reinforced."

"Have you forgotten Luella?" Henry cut in.

"Oh!" said Marie. She had forgotten, utterly, completely. While Henry was holding her in his arms she had forgotten everything but that she was where she had been wanting to be for days and days. "I'm sorry, Henry."

"So am I," Henry said. "But it was my fault. I—should have had more self-control. But you were appealing, Marie. You were appealing. You—you—do things to a man's emotions."

"I got to thinking about the old days," Marie said. "I—forgot myself. I didn't have any self-control either."

"Yes, the old days," said Henry thoughtfully. "The old days, when you planned to be a wife instead of a radio singer."

"Don't, Henry, please. You make me feel like a traitor, or someone who can't make up her mind."

They stood, silent, uncomfortable, miserable. Luella looked out and called to tell them that Mr. Rector had arrived.

"Thanks, Luella," Henry said. He took Marie's arm and they went inside.

As soon as the introductions were over, Henry went into the kitchen to prepare the mint juleps. As he worked he thought about Mr. Rector. He was a man in the early fifties, and Henry thought, exactly what he had always imagined a very successful man would be like.

Meanwhile Malcolm Rector was talking to Luella.

"I understand you saved me a helping of Brown Betty," he said. "Yes, I did," said Luella. "Shall I get it for you now?"

"Better wait until after your mint julep," Marie suggested. "I've an idea as a mint julep maker Henry is tops."

"He is," said Luella.

Mr. Rector laughed. "I seem to be on the spot," he said. "Mrs. Pell's Brown Betty or Mr. Pell's mint julep. Perhaps I should toss a coin."

Henry came in then with a tray upon which were five tall, frosted glasses.

"Need you worry about a decision now?" said Marie.

"Go ahead, Mr. Rector, and take the julep," said Luella. "The Brown Betty will keep, and the julep won't."

Invitation

WHEN each one in the room was supplied with a glass, Tommy looked over the edge of his. He smiled at Henry.
