

LAST OF PRISON ESCAPES CAUGHT

Portland, Ore., Aug. 25.—(P)—An all-night chase of an automobile thief ended today in the capture of Kenneth Lloyd Hougham, 19, third of three convicts who escaped from a state prison farm Saturday.

Two special officers and a shipyard guard caught him in a thicket in the north end of Portland after he had abandoned the fifth automobile he had stolen during the night, Sgt. Dell Holland of Portland's No. 1 precinct reported. He offered no resistance.

It turned out to be the escaped convict, Hougham said he had been "on the run" since he, James Q. Anderson, 19, and Charles Melvin Carmichael, 19, fled from the prison farm Saturday. The other two escapees were captured the same day.

Hougham, badly disheveled, said he hadn't eaten anything and had slept very little since Friday night.

"I'm glad it is all over," he told his captors.

by JOHN CLINTON

While I'm not the kind of a timid soul who pins his money to his unmentionables, or is scared to drive after sundown—nevertheless, I don't like to carry my great wealth in my pants pocket when I drive.

It's easy to lose, and if you do happen to meet up with a guy who needs it more than you do—well, at least if you leave most of it in the bank, no one can get it (except Mr. Morgenthau).

So, if you want to do any driving this summer, why don't you get a Union Oil National Credit Card, and leave all the currency above the 500-dollar bills at home? It's the safest way to travel.

It's more convenient to buy gas and oil with a card. And besides, you can charge tires, batteries and all sorts of accessories and get up to 6 months to pay for them. Also, it enables Mrs. Clinton to keep track of auto expense in her darned old budget book.

All-in-all, I don't see why you don't whip right down to your own favorite Union Oil station right now and fill out an application. It's pretty simple and painless. Tell 'em I told you, will you?

Incidentally, these cards are "good" at every Union Oil station and dealer in the West, and are also good at other stations all over the U.S. and Canada. You really oughta have one.
