

RANGE RESEEDING NEAR HASH RANCH IS O-C PROGRAM

A range reseeding project is now being carried out by the Oregon & California reseeded lands administration in section 33 lying just above the Walter Hash ranch on the Dead Indian road. The range development service, also an interior department agency, is cooperating by furnishing the seed.

The land at present is covered entirely by California foxtail, a grass of no value for grazing, said Otto C. F. Krueger, O & C district ranger. The present reseeding project is to cover about 200 acres. If this experiment proves successful, the two interior department divisions will carry out an extensive range development program on the grazing and brush lands of southern Oregon. Mr. Krueger said, the project, however, to be limited definitely to areas classified as grazing lands as determined by an O & C reclassification survey now being made.

A seed mixture of English rye, bulbous bluegrass, lotus and ladino clover is being introduced in the experimental reseeding project. The only cooperation required of stockmen is that they defer grazing stock on the reseeded area until about May 1, Mr. Krueger related.

Seeding will be done by a

CCC crew from Camp Williams Creek under the direction of Richard DeCamp, senior foreman. The entire project is under the supervision of Mr. Krueger.

COW ENTERS FASHION FIELD—Little does Bossy, chewing her cud in a quiet pasture, dream that the milk she'll give may some day end up in a hat like that Frances Donelon and June Cox (right) examine in New York, where a new felt for hats was recently introduced. It's made of casein, a milk by-product, lamb's wool and rabbit's fur—three ingredients on tray.

Wednesday, where they will spend a week.
Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Hayward have moved to Medford where their son, Clarence, will attend school.
Willard Welch and Melvin Johnson have gone to Los Angeles to take up aviation.
Mr. and Mrs. John Beam and children have moved into the Bill Swain home.
Henry Stockslager arrived from San Francisco last Monday for a few days' visit at the Hansen and Rohrer homes. Mrs. Stockslager, who has been visiting here returned home with her husband last Wednesday.
Mr. and Mrs. Cox have moved on to the Hayward place and the children have entered the Brownsboro school.
