SUBMARINE RAIDS ON PACIFIC COAST HAVE DUAL GOAL

Diversion of Naval Units From Combat Duty And Shipping Disruption Aim.

By John M. Hightower

Washington, Dec. 26.—(AP)—The raiding Japanese submarines in the Pacific are out to accomplish what German U-boats failed to off the Atlantic coast in 1918.

In both campaigns the two main objectives are the same—diversion of naval units from combat duty with the fleet for strictly defensive patrol operations in home waters, and the disruption of American shipping.

Although the Japanese are not considered by naval men to be in the same class with the grimly efficient U-boat veterans of World War I, and although their submarines must operate over vastly greater distances, they were conceded two advantages the Germans lacked.

Have Large Fleet

Japan is believed to have a much larger fleet of long range submarines, with about 40 capable of operating off the Pacific coast, and her raiders are not menaced close to their home bases by the deadly type of anti-submarine warfare which the allied navies were able to wage in the North sea during 1917-1918.

It may have been one of these long range subs which, the army disclosed yesterday, had been blasted into "debris" off California by an army bomber.

Also, Secretary of the Navy Knox announced Sunday that at least 14 enemy submarines had been "probably sunk or damaged" in the Atlantic and several "effectively dealt with" in the Pacific.

The current renewal of submarine warfare in American waters is expected to follow the general pattern of the last conflict, and the world war experience of the Atlantic coast gives the Pacific coast some idea of what to expect.

Nazis Planted Mines
During one six-month period in 1918, the Germans sent six huge cruiser type U-boats into American waters. They planted mines at the entrance to New York harbor, cut communications cables to Europe and South America, attacked coastal shipping with gunfire and torpedoes and, according to naval records, sank 170,000 tons of merchant or war craft.

Imposing as this record sounds, the U-boats did not achieve their objective. The World War secretary of the navy, Josephus Daniels, set down the verdict in a book some years later.

"In their chief mission of preventing transportation to Europe, the U-boats failed utterly," he wrote. "The flow of troops and munitions to France and England was not for a moment interrupted. In fact, it was precisely in this period that it was increased and we transported to Europe over 300,000 soldiers a month."

Bearcats Return to Coast; Eating When Japs Launch Attack

Salem, Dec. 26.—(AP)—Willamette university's 51-member football party, stranded in Honolulu when the Japanese attacked Pearl harbor, was due back in Salem late today.

The party landed in San Francisco yesterday afternoon, coming in steamer on a troop ship, with the players attending wounded soldiers and sailors on the ship.

In a telephone conversation last night, Coach Roy S. Keene, at Davis, Cal., told Ron Gemmell, sports editor of the Salem Oregon Statesman:

"When the bombing began in Honolulu we were all eating breakfast at the hotel. We saw water splashing in the harbor and asked a waiter what it was. 'It's a whale spouting,' the waiter said.

"We all trooped out to watch it, treating it as a joke. We did not know until later in the afternoon what had happened.

"The football boys were put on guard duty, guarding equipment, and the women went to the hospital for duty."

SUSAN B. DARBY PASSES AGED 84

Susan B. Darby, 84, widow of the late Chas. Darby, and a resident of Jackson county for 40 years, passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Maggie Howell on Griffin creek at 10:15 p. m., Christmas day.

She was born at Urbana, Mo., March 4, 1857. She will be greatly missed in church circles, having been a member of the Methodist church since childhood.

Mrs. Darby has been an invalid for the last four years and was a patient sufferer and a kind and loving mother to her family and held in high esteem by all who knew her.

BETTER WRAPPING AIDS POST OFFICE PACKAGE DELIVERY

No Christmas packages arrived at Medford postoffice this year that could not be delivered because of insecure wrapping which resulted in loss of the address, Postmaster Frank DeSouza said today. Usually at least one such package arrives and the good fortune this year was attributed by the postmaster to full cooperation of the public in preparing parcels properly for mailing.

There were some parcels that had not yet been delivered because they did not contain sufficiently complete addresses and therefore had to be set aside until the rush was over, Mr. DeSouza said, adding that they would be checked immediately for correct addresses.

So far as Christmas greeting correspondence was concerned, the postoffice did not have such good luck. The usual hundreds of greetings arrived without sufficient address and many of these that came third class (cent and a half stamp) will eventually have to be destroyed because they are not entitled to directory service, Mr. DeSouza explained. Carriers will look over all the undelivered third class mail, however, in an effort to make delivery but it is against regulations to assign a clerk to the job of checking the mail with city directories in an effort to find the addresses, a service given first class mail, the postmaster said. There are also hundreds of first class Yule greetings that must be checked for complete addresses, he added.

Because of congestion elsewhere, the postoffice expects to receive Christmas parcels over the next few days and these will be delivered as quickly as possible, Mr. DeSouza said.
