

NO TIME FOR LOVE

By WATKINS & WRIGHT

Chapter Ten Off For Romance

LAVINIA closed her suitcase with a bang, and locked it. "All right," she said, "I'm all set." She walked over to her aunt, put her arm around her. "Darling," she said, "it's going to make you happy for me to have a fling at frivolous living. I'll try. I hope I make your hair stand on end—but I doubt it."

"You'll get by," said Aunt Dorcas.

"Just about," said Lavinia. "And that will be all."

"All right," she said, "I'll forget Armworth's Department Store, Miss Dorcas said. 'Forget that, and the fact that you are a fairly successful young woman from Manhattan—and lend an attentive ear to whatever young men say to you.'"

"Suppose there are no young men?"

"Of course there'll be. Harbor Head is full of them."

"I mean suppose there are no young men—for me?"

"Nonsense! You're an attractive young woman, and the men will be quick to see—and get busy."

"Which will be just ducky," said Lavinia, with a touch of sarcasm.

Miss Dorcas gave her a sharp look. "And don't talk like that to the men," she warned. "If there's anything in the world that slaps a wet blanket on romance—it's sarcasm, and what you modern young people call wise cracks."

"Goodness!" said Lavinia, trying to speak gayly. "You sound like advice to the lovelorn. Don't tell me you are speaking from actual experience!"

"Maybe."

"Tell me about it, Aunt Dorcas."

"There isn't time. But please remember, Lavinia, that I wasn't born in a jungle or a buried city."

"I've always suspected you of having had a romance back in the old home town. Am I right?"

"All girls—even a girl as plain as I was—get attention," said Miss Dorcas.

Presently the buzzer rang. Miss Dorcas went to the speaking tube. "Yes!" she said.

"It's the taxi you ordered, ma'am," said a masculine voice.

"Then come on!" said Aunt Dorcas, picking up her suitcase. Lavinia picked up hers—but she hesitated. She stood in the center of the room, looking about at all her little possessions. She had a sad sort of feeling that nothing was ever going to be the same again. It made her feel like crying—made her wish she could drop her suitcase, make a flying leap for the bed—and there bury her face among the pillows.

And then the taxicab was moving off—downtown. The first lap of Lavinia's journey had begun. Grand Central Station. A streamlined train. Speeding northward. To Maine. To Harbor Head. To a gay hotel. And then what?

Now they were turning into East Forty-second street. Now they were getting out of the taxicab. Aunt Dorcas was paying the fare, and tipping far too generously. A red cap came out. He picked up the two suitcases.

"What train, lady?"

"The Boston Express," said Aunt Dorcas.

"Yes'm. Right this way, lady," Aunt Dorcas hurried after the man. Lavinia fell into step with her.

Aunt Dorcas looked at her. "Stick up your chin," she said. "You look like somebody on the way to the guillotine."

"Then I look exactly like I feel," said Lavinia.

And a sudden wave of homesickness for the quiet little spot in Connecticut swept over her. . . .

A Little Frightened

THREE days later Lavinia Prentiss was standing on a high rock upon the rugged coast of Maine. She was alone, and had never before in all her life felt so alone. Aunt Dorcas had stayed over night, had seen that she was comfortably settled in a room at the Cliffside Inn, had gotten her properly introduced to the hostess, had sampled the meals—and then departed.

"Here I go for the musty Plunketts," she said ruefully. "Be a gay girl, my dear, and see what you can do to masculine hearts while I see what I can do to a dead whale's innards!"

"Oh, Aunt Dorcas," Lavinia whispered, "I do wish you'd stay here with me!"

"Nonsense! You're on your own now, Lavinia. Remember, your mother was a heart-breaker, even if your father was rather dull. Try being your mother's child for a while. You've been your father's quite long enough."

"Yes'm," Lavinia promised, very meekly.

Then Aunt Dorcas's Portland train coming along—taking her away.

And now—the rugged coast of Maine—and Lavinia, lonely, miserable, gazing out to sea. "I feel," she told herself, "like I imagine Napoleon must have felt when he was left upon the Isle of St. Helena."

Nevertheless, officials reported, many consumers have been buying in excess of normal needs and storing the extra supplies for use in event of a shortage and higher prices, such as occurred in the first world war. It was explained that these practices, if allowed to continue much longer, might result in acute shortages later for non-hoarders.

SOLOMON A PIKER

Pawhuska, Okla. (UP)—A chain letter to end chain letters is now in circulation. The letter asked the person receiving it to send his wife to the name at the top of the list. It pointed out that if the chain went unbroken, the recipient would—at the end of the chain—receive 15,000 wives.

Rationing of Sugar May Be Ordered to Break Up Hoarding

Washington, Jan. 10. (P)—The government may order sugar rationing for consumers, authoritative sources said today, in order to halt an unwarranted hoarding epidemic.

Disclosing that such action was being considered, these sources declared that the supply situation itself did not require rationing, but that regulation appeared necessary to assure an equitable distribution among all users. Present supplies were said to be ample, and prospects were that they would continue sufficient throughout the year.
