Aliens Learn Democracy In Concentration Camp

By Robert C. Hickok
United Press Staff Correspondent
Washington—(UP)—Deportable aliens held in detention camps in the United States because return to their native countries is prevented by the war are receiving a good lesson in democracy—and liking it, according to justice department officials.

The immigration and naturalization service's detention station at Fort Missoula, Mont., where about 900 Italian seamen are being held, is typical of those already in use and others under consideration, they said.

The "detainees"—the service uses this word in preference to "prisoners" or "internees" since they are not criminals—established their own discipline and system of punishment and are free to roam the enclosed reservation as they please.

"Shortly after the arrival of the first group they were asked to select a 'commandant' to direct their activities and to act as intermediary between the detainees and the service. The purser of the S. S. Conte Biancamano was elected despite the presence of higher ranking officers.

"This system has operated smoothly to date. The men perform all labor within the detention area: cooking, dishwashing, furnace-stoking, policing of buildings, etc. They make up their own menus, bake their own bread and carry on their internal life under the orders of their elected officers."

The reservation, about one and a half miles square, is divided into two sections and the "fenced-in detention area" is surrounded by a high wire fence topped with barbed-wire.

"It is regarded by officers as more of a psychological than a physical barrier," he said. "It could not resist a mass attempt at a break-out."

Illustrating the exemplary behavior of the detainees, the observer told of the arrival of the first group of approximately 125 officers and men of the Biancamano.

"When they arrived at Fort Missoula the fence posts had been raised, but no wire had yet been strung on them. Station authorities carefully explained to the aliens that they were on their honor not to pass the line of poles at any point except at the gate, as yet not erected.

"The order was so readily accepted that when one of the men inadvertently strayed a few feet beyond the poles, he was severely reprimanded by his own officers and was even ostracized by his colleagues for days."

FREEZER STORAGE ON FARMS SHOWN TO BE PRACTICAL

Corvallis—(Sp.)—Just as the Pacific northwest is credited with having started the nationwide movement toward the use of rented storage lockers in which to keep food by freezing, so the Pacific northwest now is showing increased interest in farm refrigeration where equipment is installed on the farm.

As an aid in this movement, a station bulletin has just been issued at Oregon State college entitled "The Farm Freezing Plant," which contains detailed plans and specifications for building individual freezer units on the farm. The authors are W. H. Martin, professor of heat engineering, and F. E. Price, agricultural engineer.

Various combinations of lock-service are discussed in the bulletin, including use of a rental locker in connection with household refrigeration, or the use of two types of home freezer space without rental lockers. The most complete of these is a two-compartment farm freezer plant which has space for keeping foods at zero and at 35 degrees F. This plan involves the investment of about $600 if the carpenter work is done by the owner. The operation will require about 100 kilowatt hours of electricity per month, which would probably cost around $2. This plan is particularly adapted to needs of the larger family that can use large quantities of frozen farm-produced fruits, meats, and vegetables, or the farm family located somewhat distant from rental locker service, according to the authors.

Some individual farm freezer plants of this type are already in use on farms in Oregon and Washington and are giving good service when properly constructed, the authors say.

Glass pipe is being used in some European countries to conserve strategic materials.
