ARMY, NAVY HEADS WARNED WAR NEAR FAILED TO HEED

east of Oahu, about 130 miles distant.

At 7:20 he reported his discovery to an inexperienced lieutenant. The latter, knowing that certain American planes might be in the vicinity assumed the planes shown by the detector to be American planes and took no further action. The planes were tracked towards the island and then lost.

Secy. Knox Warns

"If war eventuates," Navy Secretary Knox wrote, "it is believed easily possible that hostilities would be initiated by a surprise attack upon the fleet or naval base at Pearl Harbor."

This, he said, reveals "inherent possibilities of a major disaster." In the order of their importance, and probability, he listed the "dangers" as air bombing attack, air torpedo plane attack, sabotage, submarine attack, mining, bombardment.

The letter was forwarded to Short and Kimmel with orders to cooperate in making suggested measures effective.

Beginning with Nov. 27, 1941, a succession of messages was sent to Kimmel and Short emphasizing the danger of the situation including one from Admiral Harold Stark, the chief of naval operations to Kimmel "which" the board said, "stated in substance that the dispatch was considered a war warning."

It directed a defensive deployment of fleet task forces, and reported a probability of aggressive Japanese action against the Philippines, Thailand, the Kra peninsula or Borneo.

Codes Destroyed

On the third, fourth and sixth of December three messages went from Washington to Kimmel stating it was believed certain that Japanese consulates were destroying their codes because of the tense situation and burning secret documents. Naval forces in the far Pacific were ordered to do likewise.

"The foregoing messages did not create in the minds of the responsible officers in the Hawaiian area apprehension as to probable imminence of air raids," the board said.

"On the contrary, they only served to emphasize in their minds the danger from sabotage and surprise submarine attack. The necessity for taking a state of war readiness would have been required to avert or meet an air raid attack was not considered."

On Dec. 1, the director of naval intelligence issued a bulletin, saying that Japanese fleet movements "indicated clearly that extensive preparations are under way for hostilities."

After telling of the deployment of other Japanese fleet units, it added that the major capital ship strength remained in home waters as well as the greatest portion of the carriers.

To this the board appended its interpretation that:

"The naval intelligence services in Hawaii, due to lack of information indicating that the bulk of the Japanese carriers were at sea, concluded they were in home ports."

A last warning was sent from Washington one hour and 22 minutes before the attack advising that an almost "immediate break in relations" was expected. Every effort was made to expedite it, but it did not arrive in time "due to conditions beyond the control of every one concerned."

No Liquor

The inquiry board was headed by Owen J. Roberts, on leave as associate justice of the U. S. supreme court.

The Roberts report, apparently taking note from rumors that a large portion of the army and navy personnel in Hawaii had been on week-end leave as the attack began, said that officers and enlisted men of both services were present in sufficient number and were in fit condition to perform any duty. It added that the use of liquor on the evening before, except for a negligible number, did not affect their efficiency.

Among contributory causes to the success of the attack, the commission found were restrictions, such as those on wire tapping, which prevented effective counter-espionage. It noted, too, that warning messages had placed emphasis on the probability of Japanese action in the Far East and on anti-sabotage measures.

It is true, the report asserted, that there was a deficiency in material for the Hawaiian area because of the enormous demand on the nation's munitions and war supplies. But this deficiency, the commission declared, "did not affect the critical fact of failure to take appropriate measures with the means available."

The responsible commanders in the Hawaiian area, the report said, had "prepared plans, which, if adapted to and used for the existing emergency, would have been adequate."

No Orders

"Had orders issued by the chief of staff and the chief of naval operations November 27, 1941, been complied with," the commission concluded, "the aircraft warning system should have been operating; the distant reconnaissance of the navy and the inshore air patrol of the army should have been maintained, the anti-aircraft batteries of the army and similar shore batteries of the navy, as well as additional anti-aircraft artillery located on vessels of the fleet in Pearl Harbor, should have been manned and supplied with ammunition, and a high state of readiness of aircraft should have been in effect.

"None of these conditions was in fact inaugurated or maintained, for the reason that the responsible commanders failed to consult and cooperate as to necessary action based upon the warnings and to adopt measures enjoined by the orders given them by the chiefs of the army and navy commands in Washington."

Both officers and men responded immediately when the attack began, the commission said, and exhibited "initiative, efficiency and bravery in meeting the raid."

But the army and navy commanders, the commission said, had failed to make "suitable dispositions" to meet an attack and had "failed properly to evaluate the seriousness of the situation."

"These errors of judgment," Roberts and his four associates declared, "were the effective causes for the success of the attack."

No Alert

The report said it was believed the Japanese consulate at Honolulu served as the center of espionage activity, pointing out that last summer more than 200 Japanese consular agents were acting under the Japanese consul.

As for the attack itself, the commission said available information indicated either three or four aircraft carriers, supporting surface craft, and a few small submarines were employed and that these, except for the subs, approached from the north.

The U. S. S. Antares sighted a suspicious object off Pearl Harbor at 6:30 a. m. the day of the attack, the report continued, and this was identified as a small submarine, which was sunk by action of a naval patrol plane and the U. S. S. Ward. A report of this action reached the naval base watch officer at 7:12 a. m. and he notified his chief of staff, but no alert warnings were issued, the commission asserted. Forty-three minutes later, at 7:55 a. m., the onslaught on Pearl Harbor began.

PORTLAND LIMITS SALES OF SUGAR

Portland, Jan. 24.—(AP)—Retail stores limited customers today generally to 10-pound purchases of sugar, some to three and four-pound sacks. Some sold only to recognized customers.

Grocers said a run on sugar earlier this week nearly emptied shelves.

A government rationing order limited stores to an approximate 50 per cent of normal purchases and occasioned the scare of a sugar shortage.

"We don't anticipate any immediate shortage," one store manager said. "Through this allotment program the government is merely creating an artificial scarcity to prevent hoarding."

ARMY COMMANDER HAS NO COMMENT

Oklahoma City, Jan. 24.—(AP) Lieut. Gen. Walter C. Short declined tonight to comment on findings of a special commission which accused him and Admiral Husband E. Kimmel of dereliction of duty preceding the surprise attack on Pearl harbor.

Asked if he wished to make a statement, General Short replied:

"Not a word."

He and Mrs. Short, since their return from Hawaii shortly after he was relieved as commanding general of the Hawaiian department, have been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter C. Dean of Oklahoma City.
