Shot In the Limb May Open Buds of Your Tardy Trees

By Howard W. Blakeslee
(AP Feature Writer)
Dallas, Tex. — Maybe your favorite tree needs a shot in one of its limbs.

A little yeast or some ground-up plant tissues make a good hypodermic for this purpose. J. P. Bennett, University of California, told the American Association for the Advancement of Science here that these shots in a tree limb cause the buds to open.

Extracts of tops or roots of plants and of bark or wood of trees all make good bud openers. The vitamins, except nicotinic acid (the anti-pellagra vitamin) failed.

Some of the substances which cause plants to grow when rubbed on the outside, worked to stop the buds from opening when injected into limbs.

Dr. Bennett is trying to identify the specific substance which makes tree buds open. He thinks it is some nitrogen compound.

In orchards earlier opening might sometimes be an advantage. Perhaps a shot of the retarders would be valuable in cold spring seasons when frosts are likely.

ALL WOOD PULP TO BE RATIONED

Washington, March 13—(AP)—The government today took control of the nation's entire supply of wood pulp, effective May 1, under a war production board order assuming power to allocate both domestically produced and imported pulp to paper mills and other users.

The order is intended "to conserve supplies and distribute equitably the available pulp between competing war and civilian requirements," WPB said. Nitration pulp is used for making explosives and military demand is expected to mount steeply this year.

Pulp imported from Canada, the principal foreign source of supply, after noon, eastern war time, on May 1, will be "frozen" until released by J. S. Knowlson, WPB's director of industry operations.
