Maintain Soils For Long War

More conservation farming on more farms than ever before is needed if agriculture meets production goals this year and for the duration of the war. Conservation practices are needed that will get greater and wiser production not only this year, but more production per acre and per farm next year and for the duration. Two things are necessary to carry out agriculture's war production task:

1. Use every method of adjustment to get the right amount of each product, without waste.
2. Use every method of conservation to increase yields this year and build up the soil for bigger output next year.

We were in the last war only 18 months, and yet agriculture was barely able to get by—regarding the future—by recklessly plowing up additional acres, by shooting up too much of our ammunition in the first wild volley. This time we cannot possibly get the needed production simply through a "plough-up spree." AAA county and community committees were advised this week in a letter from Fred S. Wallace, national chief of AAA.

Oregon farmers and ranchers, cashing in on soil fertility built up through conservation work in recent years, have a running start on this year's production goals, Robert B. Taylor, chairman of the Oregon AAA committee, points out. Citing the increased interest in pasture and range improvement practices and the big demand for lime and phosphate through AAA program, Taylor believes that Oregon farmers are laying a foundation for heavier production for as long as the war lasts.

Beetles Bother Victory Gardens

Asparagus beetles are now feeding and laying eggs on young asparagus shoots. These eggs hatch in about a week after being laid. The young larvae from these eggs continue to feed on the tender shoots. The most practical control measure at this time is to keep the asparagus bed clean. All sprouts that are too small for use should be removed and burned to destroy the eggs.

Whether or not the patch is infested can be determined by examining the tips of the shoots for a black beetle with red and yellow markings. The beetles are about 1/4 inch long. Later control can be obtained by spraying or dusting the tops with calcium arsenate. This way that the unattractive features will not be noticed. If the green is worn.

5. To try a color by holding it under the chin before a well-lighted mirror, the light being the same, daylight or artificial, in which the individual plans to wear the color.
6. To choose a color which will accent the best features of the individual.
7. That color is a personal problem. Individuals cannot be classified into groups as to suitable colors. One may have the choice pale, delicate colors. A bright red dress worn by a person with black hair will make her hair appear all the darker.
8. The complement of a color also intensifies it. A sallow skin will appear very yellow if violet is worn, just as pink cheeks will appear more rosy if cutting has been stopped. For a continuous supply of sweet corn all summer, a small block should be planted every 10 days or two weeks from now until June 10. This will supply corn from July 15 until frost.

Sweet corn is very tender to frost and April 20 is generally considered the start of the safe period for planting. Even then late frosts may damage the plants, but the earliness of the crop is well worth the risk involved.

In the home garden, the corn should be planted in blocks rather than in long single rows. This gives a better chance for pollination and resulting well filled ears. Five rows, 15 feet long should be planted now and an additional 15 feet should be added every 10 days or two weeks. Corn should be planted three feet apart between the rows and 12 to 15 inches in the row.

Golden Early Market is an excellent variety. Golden Bantam is still tops for quality and should furnish the mid-season crop. Golden Cross Bantam is a hybrid corn that is somewhat resistant to worm attack so is particularly desirable for late planting.

Suckering of the early crop is desirable. It will not increase yield but it has a tendency to cause the corn to ripen a little earlier.

Color Important in Choosing Dress

Color takes on added importance this year as we think about the selection of spring and summer clothing. Good color when you could buy a gay red dress to lift your spirits without color in the dress.

On the other hand, if ever we needed color it is now and we see this need fulfilled by the gay colorful prints and plaids on the street and in the shops. Color is still with us, but of necessity it must be planned color. Each piece of material must be of a hue that will blend with our basic clothing. In order to accomplish this you might be interested in the following rules in color selection.

1. To modify unbecoming colors with a collar or a yoke, colored embroidery, scarf, tie, beads, buttons or other trimming of a harmonizing color that is becoming to the wearer.
2. The repetition of a color intensifies it, so choose colors to emphasize good points in such a way that the unattractive features will not be noticed. If the

Says Patent Pool Bottleneck

John Henry Lewin (left), special assistant to the attorney general, described for senate patent law committee the patent pool which he said linked General Electric with Krupp interests in Germany and was a bottleneck in production of armored tanks and other war material. Beside Lewin is Senator D. Worth Clark (D-Ia).
