

CLAIMS AMERICA FAST BECOMING AUDIENCE LAND

Looking, Listening Should Be Replaced By Participation, Says Yale Man.

Milwaukee—(U.P.)—Too many American read, listen and look on without taking an active part in anything—this is the totalitarian, not the democratic way of life, asserts Marshall Bartholomew, conductor of the Yale University glee club.

Addressing the Music Educators National Conference at Milwaukee recently, Bartholomew expounded the belief that living on "canned" music from day to day is just as unsatisfactory as any unvaried diet of canned food. Music "is a fundamental human need," he contended, "and something inside of you goes hungry and empty without it."

Good Citizenship
The phonograph, radio and sound-films were conceded to be "magnificent inventions," but the speaker held that they made it necessary for Americans to guard more intensively than ever against permitting the audience habit to dominate adult life in the United States.
"Today, with a second world war upon us, more devastating than the first, when we are fighting for the democratic way of living in all its phases, when everything that we believe in is under attack, we must fight this audience habit," Bartholomew declared. "One of the fundamental principles of good citizenship in a democracy is to participate."

Music Inspirational
"Listening is not enough! If we are to win this war, as win it we undoubtedly shall, a part of our job as music educators is to see that more of the music which we learned and in which we participated with such enthusiasm in school and college is actively carried over into adult life. We must learn again to

Five Men Aid Street Flood Rescue

Five men helped rescue Frank Lawson after a downtown Seattle water main broke and caused sidewalk cave-in that threw Lawson into eight feet of water. Lawson is the man with the mustache (fourth from left). The others, nearly submerged, leaped in to aid him and two men at left had to extend helping hands to them, while a crowd in the background saw it all.
